

CONTENTS

Preface	viii
1 Overview of the Political Economy of Communication	1
What is political economy?	2
The political economy of communication	6
Philosophical foundation	10
Commodifying content, audiences, and labor	11
From commodification to spatialization	14
Structuration: Social structure and human agency	16
Building bridges: Cultural studies, public choice, and beyond	18
2 What is Political Economy? Definitions and Characteristics	21
Definitions of political economy	22
Central characteristics	26
Conclusion	36
3 What is Political Economy? Schools of Thought	37
The origins of political economy and the classical paradigm	37
The radical critique	40
The conservative critique	44
From political economy to neoclassical economics	45
Varieties of political economy or heterodox economics	50
Conclusion: The limits of economics or why we need political economy	61
4 The Development of a Political Economy of Communication	65
The concept of communication	65
Social and intellectual influences on the political economy of communication	68
Conclusion	81
5 The Political Economy of Communication: Building a Foundation	82
North American origins	82
The emergence of political economy in European communication research	89

Steps toward a global political economy of communication	97
Conclusion	103
6 The Political Economy of Communication Today	104
The globalization of political economy	104
A political economy approach to the history of communication	109
Standpoints of resistance	113
The transition from old to new media	119
Media activism	124
Conclusion	125
7 Commodification: Content, Audiences, Labor	127
Introduction to Chapters 7–9	127
What is commodification?	129
The commodity form in communication	133
Immanent commodification	141
Externalizing commodification	143
Alternative processes in private and public life	147
Conclusion	155
8 Spatialization: Space, Time, and Communication	157
Communication and concentration: Space as institutional extension	158
Spatial agglomeration: Remapping corporate space	169
The state	175
Globalization and its antimonies	179
Conclusion	183
9 Structuration: Class, Gender, Race, Social Movements, Hegemony	185
Communication and social class	189
Communication and gender	196
Communication and race	200
Communication and social movements	202
Hegemony	206
Conclusion	209
10 Challenges on the Borders... and Beyond	211
Borderlines	211
Lessons from the borders: Cultural studies	214
Lessons from the borders: Public choice theory	217
Responses from political economy	220

••• Contents •••

Conclusion: A return to class power	232
Coda: Challenges on the horizon	234
References	237
Index	262