

Contents

Acknowledgments	ix
Introduction
American Literature and Environmental Politics	1
Historicizing Environmental Politics	4
The Unique Problem of Environmental Politics	8
Chapter 1
Ralph Waldo Emerson, Henry David Thoreau, and the Formation of American Literature's Core Environmental Values	19
Emerson's Redefinition of Nature	21
The Consequences of Emerson's Abstract and Imperialist Nature	25
Chapter 2
James Fenimore Cooper, American Canon Formation, and American Literature's Erasure of Environmental Anxiety	37
Removing Cooper from History and Delegitimizing His Environmental Politics	38
Recontextualizing Cooper and Restoring His Environmental Politics	43
Chapter 3
Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, United States National Literature, and the American Canon's Erasure of Material Nature	55
Longfellow's Literary Manifestoes	56
Longfellow and the Nineteenth-Century American Literature Debates	58
Longfellow's Un-Emersonian Nature	62
The Nation's Shifting Sense of Nature and Longfellow's Hedge Against the Future	64
Erasing Longfellow and Naturalizing American Literary Personality in the Early Twentieth Century	67

Chapter 4

Willa Cather and John Steinbeck, Environmental Schizophrenia, and Monstrous Ecology	75
The Unavoidability of Environmental Politics in Willa Cather's World	76
Environmental Desire and Environmental Schizophrenia	80
Cather's Canonically Modulated Environmental Schizophrenia	82
Steinbeck, Ecology, and American Culture	89
Steinbeck and Monstrosity	92
Steinbeck's Monstrous Ecology	94

Chapter 5

Zora Neale Hurston, the Power of Harlem, and the Promise of Florida	103
Hurston, Harlem, and Power	104
Creating a Floridian Blackspace	109

Afterword

Ernest Hemingway and American Literature's Legacy of Environmental Disengagement	125
The Circular Trajectory of Environmental Openness in In Our Time	127
Bad Faith in Green Hills of Africa	130

Notes	135
--------------	-----

Works Cited	167
--------------------	-----

Index	185
--------------	-----