

CONTENTS

I. Historianship

1. The rise of historical consciousness (1).
2. The history of professional history (5).
3. History as a "social science" (11).
4. Historianship during the current crisis (14).
5. "Historical thinking has entered our very blood" (23).

II. Problems for the Profession

1. From history of the few to history of the many (25).
2. Tocqueville about the future of history writing (27).
3. Public opinions and popular sentiments (29).
4. The sentiments of nations (34).
5. The structure of events (38).
6. After 1960, fads within the profession (42).
7. The prevalence of social history (47).
8. The present and future of history teaching (52).
9. Dangers of falsifications (58).

Contents

III. The Appetite for History

1. A new phenomenon. Its various evidences (61). 2. At the same time the reduced teaching of history (64). 3. Possible sources of the appetite (66). 4. The interest in biographies (72). 5. Ignorance of history — together with a latent sense of its growing importance (76).

IV. Re-Cognition of History as Literature

1. History, including its facts, consists of words (81). 2. Absurdities of "social history" while history is literature (83). 3. "Amateur" historians and their merits (90). 4. Neither "objective" nor "subjective" but "participant" (96). 5. Historical idealism is not categorical or determinist. The decisive significance of "when?" (100).

V. History and the Novel

1. Historians and novelists. Different tasks (109). 2. "Fact" and "fiction" (111). 3. The origins and the history of the novel, which historians must consider (112). 4. Every novel is a historical novel (120). 5. Potentiality: What happened; what might have happened (122). 6. Recent and current crisis of the novel (124). 7. Absorption of the novel by history: A new form of literature (131). A small addendum (135).

VI. Future of the Profession

1. Future of books and of reading (139). 2. History is necessarily revisionist (143). 3. Pursuit of justice; pursuit of truth (149). 4. Shortsightedness of American liberal historians. Ideas and beliefs (152).

Contents

VII. Tradition, Inheritance, Imagination

1. The passing of an entire age (159). 2. Further development of historical consciousness (162). 3. Will technology outlast history? (165). 4. “. . . the hope that from now on a new kind of thinking may begin . . .” (169).

Apologia 173