

Contents

Preface	ix
§1. Preamble
§2. My own history: Past work and this one
§3. The structure of this book
§4. A philosophical framework for aesthetics
§5. Acknowledgements
§6. Abbreviations
Ch 1. Dance, art and philosophy: A personal introduction	1
§1. Thinking about authenticity in dance performance
§2. Performables, (numerical) identity questions, and philosophy
§3. Locating the philosophical aesthetics of dance
§4. The account of dance (and dance-understanding)
§5. Are dances just aesthetically pleasing movement?
§6. Are dances considered aesthetically and artistically?
§7. Dance and transfiguration
§8. Examples A: Swan Lake and the history of ‘art’
§9. Examples B: Swan Lake and authorship
§10. Examples C: The disappearance of dances
§11. Conclusion
Part One: Dances as Performables	31
Ch 2. Making sense of multiples	33
§1. Introduction
§2. Danceworks as interpretations
§3. Reprising the issue of work-identity
§4. Simple type-token account
§5. Goodman on autographic-allographic
§6. Elaborating the place of ‘history of production’
§7. Intermezzo: The variety of dance notation
§8. Play-scripts are not like dance scores
§9. Type-token artworks
§10. Providing a framework for debate?
§11. Conclusion

Ch 3. Authenticity in performance, work-identity and practice	70
§1. Same-work continuity and the Thesis of Notationality?
§2. Dance is instantiated only through performance
§3. The powers of specific dancers are relevant
§4. Some limitations of video recordings
§5. Normativity, performance, and compliance with a score
§6. An adequate score?
§7. Some issues for the 'Thesis of Notationality' account
§8. Connecting the issues
§9. Writing authoritative scores
§10. Defeasibility and 'history of production'
§11. Artistically-relevant differences?
§12. Conclusion
Ch 4. Preservation, recording and dance performance	96
§1. Introduction
§2. Goodman's practical concerns for notation systems
§3. Discussing dances from scores
§4. Dances as not suitable for preservation?
§5. Dances from interpretations: another place for scores?
§6. Watching recordings
§7. Watching the dance?
§8. A return to contextualism
§9. Conclusion
Part Two: Making Artworks	117
Ch 5. Thinking about the choreographer	119
§1. The standard stuff: intentionalism vs. anti-intentionalism
§2. Resolving the issue?
§3. The death of the artist
§4. "Intentionalism composed out of anti-intentionalist materials"
§5. Intentionalism, hypothetical and (modest) actual
§6. Modest actual intentionalism returns
§7. Intention and history of production
§8. Hypothetical intentionalism, creation and dance
§9. Conclusion
Ch 6. Improvisation, dance and notation again!	153
§1. Introduction
§2. Four cases for contrast

- §3. Improvisation and choreography
- §4. Improvisation vs. 'happening': a place for notation?
- §5. Conclusion

Part Three: The Dancer's Share 165

Ch 7. Are dancers are artists?: Dancers, performances and physicality 167

- §1. The distinctiveness of dancers
- §2. Dancers instantiate the dance
- §3. Dancers as building blocks
- §4. The contingencies of instantiating dances
- §5. 'Live performance'
- §6. Issue of virtuoso performers
- §7. A theory of embodiment?
- §8. Dancers and danceworks
- §9. Conclusion

Ch 8. Mastering movement: Kinaesthesia, proprioception and subjectivity 185

- §1. Art and experience
- §2. No place for kinaesthesia in artistic appreciation
- §3. Could proprioception be a basis for artistic judgement?
- §4. The place of the mirror reflex?
- §5. What about mirror neurons?
- §6. A complication: 'muscle memory'?
- §7. Conclusion

Part Four: A Narrative of Dance History 207

Ch 9. Reconstructing dances?: Some conceptual questions 209

- §1. Introduction
- §2. Setting up the issues more clearly
- §3. What is involved in reconstruction?
- §4. A brief digression, to draw the comparison with music?
- §5. Fairness in our appreciation of a reconstruction?
- §6. Some other cases to consider
- §7. The point(s) of dance history
- §8. An omission recorded
- §9. Conclusion

Ch 10. Dance-understanding and dance history	235
§1. Understanding categories of art
§2. Cognitivism in art-understanding?
§3. Criticism as applying the rules?
§4. 'Masterworks' in learning to understanding dance
§5. Masterworks, and an 'ideal observer' for art?
§6. The powers of the 'ideal critic'
§7. Problems of idealising
§8. A distinctiveness to dance experience?
§9. Recording: An ontological issue?
§10. Performance traditions and traditions of performance
§11. Conclusion
Ch. 11. Conclusion: Making sense of dance	269
§1. Introduction
§2. Some issues of defining "dance"
§3. Concepts and moments in history
§4. Dealing with the Republic of Dance
§5. 'First art': an issue for institutionalism?
§6. But, still, is it really dance?
§7. Conclusion
§8. And finally
Appendix : Technical matter for type-token ontology	289
§1. Introduction: the place for ontology?
§2. Dodd's theory
§3. Two key questions?
§4. Made or discovered?
§5. Eternal 'objects'?
§6. Found art again?
§7. 'History of production' again
§8. Conclusion
Notes	307
Bibliography	321
Index	333