Contents

Acknowledgments xi

Introduction 1

1. The Question 7
   - 1.1 The Question 7
   - 1.2 Two Interpretations of Contingencies 12
   - 1.3 The Possibility of Control 16
   - 1.4 Practical Reason 19
   - 1.5 Toward an Answer 23

2. Increasing Control 26
   - 2.1 A Case in Point 27
   - 2.2 The Question of Significance 28
   - 2.3 The Variable Approach 33
   - 2.4 Objections Considered 38
   - 2.5 Loose Ends 46

3. Correcting Attitudes 47
   - 3.1 Values 48
   - 3.2 Limits 53
   - 3.3 Commitments 56
   - 3.4 Critical Reflection 63
   - 3.5 Corrected Attitudes 64

4. Aiming at Well-Being 67
   - 4.1 Mistakes about Well-Being 68
   - 4.2 Coherence 72
   - 4.3 Coherence is Not Enough 76
   - 4.4 Realism 81
   - 4.5 Obstacles to Well-Being 86

Kekes, John
The human condition
2010

digitalisiert durch:
IDS Basel Bern

5. Dimensions of Value 88
5.1 The Human Dimension 89
5.2 The Cultural Dimension 91
5.3 The Personal Dimension 96
5.4 Conflicts 97
5.5 Right vs. Wrong Approaches to Conflict-Resolution 103

6. The Human Dimension and Evil 114
6.1 What is Evil? 114
6.2 The Secular Problem of Evil 119
6.3 Inadequate Explanations 122
6.4 Toward an Adequate Explanation 127
6.5 Evil and the Human Condition 135

7. Responsibility for Evil 138
7.1 The Reflexivity of Evil 139
7.2 Intention and Responsibility 146
7.3 The Standard 149
7.4 Excuses 153
7.5 Weakening the Reasons for Evil-doing 160

8. The Cultural Dimension and Disenchantment 162
8.1 Disenchantment 163
8.2 Modes of Evaluation 166
8.3 Exemplars 171
8.4 The Quest for an Overriding Mode of Evaluation 177
8.5 Modus Vivendi 182

9. The Personal Dimension and Boredom 185
9.1 Boredom 186
9.2 The Thrill of Evil 189
9.3 Unassuagable Boredom? 194
9.4 The Burden of Reflection 199
9.5 Overview 204

10. Secular Hope 207
10.1 Depth 207
10.2 Modest Hope 211
10.3 The Illusion of Autonomy 216
10.4 The Illusion of the Categorical Imperative 219
10.5 Secular Hope without Illusions 225

Conclusion 232

Notes 246

Works Cited 262

Index 271