

Contents

Acknowledgements	viii
Introduction	1
1 Women, Forms of Exile and Diasporic Identities	7
2 'Outside History': Exile and Myths of the Irish Feminine in Julia O'Faolain's No Country for Young Men and The Irish Signorina	43
3 Negotiating with the Motherland: Exile and the Irish Woman Writer in Edna O'Brien's The Country Girls Trilogy and The Light of Evening	65
4 Relative Visibility: Women, Exile and Censorship in John McGahern's The Leavetaking and Amongst Women	93
5 Architectures of Exile and Self-Exile in William Trevor's Felicia's Journey and The Story of Lucy Gault	126
6 The Refusenik Returnee and Reluctant Emigrant in Colm Tóibín's The South and Brooklyn	156
7 'Ireland is Something That Often Happens Elsewhere': Displaced and Disrupted Histories in Anne Enright's What Are You Like? and The Gathering	184
Afterword	208
Bibliography	214
Index	230