

Contents

Preface	page xiii
1. Introduction	1
The agent–structure debate	3
The nature of structure	4
Ameliorating the dilemma: reciprocity	7
Systemic traditions	10
Nested politics	16
The argument, in brief	17
Advantages	18
Plan of the book	21
2. System, state, and citizen	23
Introduction	23
Systems: general principles	24
Rational expectations	26
Complexity vs. parsimony	28
Components of the theory	29
Citizen	30
State	32
System	35
Security-related activity	37
Interactive vs. regulatory politics	39
The theory	40
Hypotheses	43
Actor-level hypothesis	43
Structural hypothesis	44
Realist structural hypothesis	45
Systemic hypotheses	45
Implications for other theories	47
Offensive and defensive realism	48
Balance of power: two additional assumptions	52
Relative power and levels of activity	54
Trading states and balances of power	55
The logic of hegemony	57

Constructivism and socialization	57
Second-order effects	59
Conclusion	66
3. System, process, and evidence	68
The European system	69
1815–1914	69
1919–1939	73
1945–1993	77
Who are the actors?	79
Data	82
Capabilities and arms levels: the correlates of war	83
The balance of ideology: polity	85
Worldviews and levels of activity: the historians' survey	86
Interrogating the data	90
Estimation	91
Results	93
Reducible to realism?	95
Rational expectations	96
Visualizing systemic incentives	98
Diagnostic checks	103
Domestic constraint	103
Are there more than three systems?	108
Conclusion	111
4. Systems in historic perspective	112
Case 1: the polarization of Europe, 1815–1834	113
The Vienna settlement	115
The liberalization of Britain	119
The growing liberal challenge	124
The early 1830s: revolution and schism	128
Summary	131
Case 2: the end of American isolation, 1940	132
The legacy of Versailles	133
Nazi ideology	134
German foreign policy	137
German weakness	137
Initial American indifference	140
Structural change: Germany's rise	142
End of isolation	143
Summary	147
Case 3: the end of the Cold War, 1985–1990	147
Introduction	147
Background	152
Previous cycles of reform	152
Stagnation	154

Institutional influence	157
The rise of Gorbachev	160
Changing constituencies	161
Neutralizing opposition, enhancing support (1982–1986)	162
Continued reform, increasing resistance (1986–1988)	164
Transformation (1988–1990)	167
The trigger: changing Soviet worldviews	168
Interpretation	175
Reaction: red tide’s ebb	176
Afghanistan	176
Armaments	177
Eastern Europe	180
Partial adjustment: American prudence	185
Testing the Soviets	187
Passing the test	189
Summary	192
Conclusion	193
5. Conclusions and implications	194
Into the future?	195
Sovereignty, terror, proliferation, and deterrence	196
The rise of China	202
Democracy	204
System effects	207
Systems and forecasts	209
What is to be done?	209
Systems and international relations	211
Appendix A: Theoretical details	213
The model	213
Relaxing the unidimensionality assumption	218
Sympathetic vs. antagonistic states	218
Analytical results	219
Realism implies a balance of power	219
Defensive realism also implies a balance of power	221
A balance of power does not imply realism	221
Socialization implies a balance of power	222
Appendix B: Empirical details	225
Nested politics and structural change	225
Derivation	226
Detailed results	228
Bibliography	243
Index	269