

Contents

Figures	IX
Typographical conventions	XV
Acknowledgements	XIII
1 Introduction	1
2 Linguistic description, presentation structure and the status of punctuation	13
2.1 Issues of linguistic description	13
2.1.1 Medium-transferability and the linguistic sign	13
2.1.2 Decoding linguistic utterances: a 'three-channel approach'	20
2.1.3 Linguistic description: distinctive units of analysis.	26
2.1.3.1 Overview.	26
2.1.3.2 The medium-independent expression system	28
2.1.3.3 The medium-dependent expression systems of speech and writing.	30
2.2 Presentation structure	35
2.2.1 Medium-independent choices	36
2.2.1.1 Choices which do not influence directly the structure of clause complexes	36
2.2.1.2 Choices which influence directly the structure of clause complexes.	40
2.2.2 Medium-dependent choices	42
2.2.2.1 Medium-dependent spoken choices	43
2.2.2.2 Medium-dependent written choices.	48
2.3 Verbal and nonverbal information: punctuation from a semiotic perspective.	58
2.3.1 Verbal and nonverbal information.	58
2.3.2 Punctuation marks as indices.	60
2.3.2.1 Determining the communicative value of punctuation.	61

2.3.2.2	Punctuation in a model of verbal and nonverbal information	65
3	A short diachronic view on punctuation	69
3.1	Forerunners of punctuation	69
3.2	Punctuation in Old and Middle English	72
3.3	Punctuation and the orthographic sentence	75
4	The structure of written text: the script unit model	81
4.1	The relationship of orthographic sentence and clause complex	81
4.2	The level of parasyntax	83
4.3	The script unit	85
5	Elements of punctuation in present-day English	91
5.1	Defining punctuation	91
5.2	Non-alphanumeric characters	94
5.2.1	As part of orthographic word-forms	95
5.2.2	Creating punctuation units	97
5.2.2.1	Terminal period (or full stop)	98
5.2.2.2	Question mark and exclamation mark	102
5.2.2.3	Semicolon and colon	103
5.2.2.4	Comma	104
5.2.2.5	Dash and parentheses	106
5.2.2.6	Quotation marks	108
5.2.3	The dual function of punctuation marks: separation and specification	109
6	Collecting data to account for the communicative value of punctuation	115
7	Exploring the guide functions of punctuation	125
7.1	General punctuation principles	125
7.1.1	Punctuation as a style marker	126
7.1.1.1	Indicating dimensions of linguistic variation	126
7.1.1.2	Divided usage	128
7.1.2	Obligatory sentence-internal punctuation	132
7.1.2.1	Cases of structural opacity	132
7.1.2.2	Cases of intervening syntactic material	136
7.1.3	Punctuation and structural integrity	138
7.2	Punctuation in context	140
7.2.1	Punctuation at word-level	140
7.2.1.1	Disambiguation	140
7.2.1.2	Intensity of effect	142
7.2.2	Punctuation units and syntax	145

7.2.2.1	Coordinated constituents	145
7.2.2.1.1	Syndetic coordination	145
7.2.2.1.2	Asyndetic coordination	154
7.2.2.2	Restrictive and non-restrictive modifiers	160
7.2.2.2.1	Relative clause	161
7.2.2.2.2	Apposition	168
7.2.2.3	Adverbials	178
7.2.2.3.1	Adjunct	180
7.2.2.3.2	Disjunct	193
7.2.2.3.3	Conjunct	198
7.2.2.4	Disambiguation of medium-independent structures	204
7.2.2.4.1	The linguistic function of punctuation	204
7.2.2.4.2	Parsing strategies	206
7.2.2.4.3	Punctuation as a guide to ambiguous medium-independent structures: some examples	211
7.2.3	Punctuation units and text	224
7.2.3.1	Punctuational variability	224
7.2.3.1.1	Light and heavy punctuation	224
7.2.3.1.2	Punctuation as an indicator of sub- and superordinate boundaries	229
7.2.3.1.3	Deviant punctuation	232
7.2.3.2	The specifying function of punctuation	242
7.2.3.2.1	Punctuation as a marker of separative force	242
7.2.3.2.2	Punctuation and discourse structure	245
8	The guide functions of punctuation: theoretical and functional synopsis	251
8.1	Synopsis I: theoretical insights	251
8.2	Synopsis II: functional insights	253
8.2.1	Punctuation as a paralinguistic device: guide functions 1 to 8 (GF 1–8)	254
8.2.1.1	Reducing cognitive complexity (GF 1–4)	254
8.2.1.1.1	Guide function 1 (GF 1)	255
8.2.1.1.2	Guide function 2 (GF 2)	257
8.2.1.1.3	Guide function 3 (GF 3)	258
8.2.1.1.4	Guide function 4 (GF 4)	260
8.2.1.2	Contributing to the conceptualisation of a piece of writing (GF 5–8)	262
8.2.1.2.1	Guide function 5 (GF 5)	262
8.2.1.2.2	Guide function 6 (GF 6)	264

VIII Contents

8.2.1.2.3	Guide function 7 (GF 7)	266
8.2.1.2.4	Guide function 8 (GF 8)	267
8.2.2	Punctuation as a linguistic device: guide function 9 (GF 9)	269
9	Conclusion: punctuation and the reader.	271
	References	279
	Index	295