

Table of contents

Acknowledgments	XI
List of tables and figures	XIII
CHAPTER 1
Introducing language use and power in personal/diary blogs	1
1.1 Overture	1
1.2 Laying out the dual approach to power	3
1.3 Research questions and scope	5
1.4 Structure	6
CHAPTER 2
Blogging as a social practice	9
2.1 Introduction	9
2.2 Introducing blogs	10
2.2.1 A working definition of blogs	11
2.2.2 Personal/diary blogs: An increasingly-popular sub-type	16
2.3 Frames in blog communities of practice	23
2.3.1 The participant framework of personal/diary blogs	23
2.3.2 Relational work and interpersonal language use	26
2.3.3 Expectations in personal/diary blogs	28
2.3.4 Norms of interaction in personal/diary blogs	31
2.4 Summary	32
CHAPTER 3
Power in theory	35
3.1 Introducing power or “another conceptual can of worms” (Thornborrow 2002, 5)	35
3.2 Differential access to the blogosphere: The digital divide	37
3.3 Distribution of resources within blogs	41
3.4 Conversational control and the exercise of power: Implications for personal/diary blogs	44
3.5 Summary	52

CHAPTER 4

Disagreements and agreements in theory	55
4.1 Defining disagreements and agreements (criticism and compliments)	55
4.2 Social factors associated with disagreements and agreements offline and online	56
4.2.1 Face and preference	58
4.2.2 Frames, culture and participant relationships	64
4.2.3 Participant relationships (and hierarchies)	67
4.2.4 Participation format	69
4.3 Medium factors associated with disagreements and agreements online	70
4.3.1 Anonymity and lack of social context cues (flaming)	71
4.3.2 Message format, persistence of transcript and quoting (responsiveness)	73
4.4 Disagreements and the exercise of power	76
4.5 Summary	77

CHAPTER 5

The blog corpus and its analysis	79
5.1 Introduction	79
5.2 Data description	79
5.2.1 Technical characteristics of the blogs	79
5.2.2 A sociolinguistic characterisation of the eight personal/diary blogs	80
5.3 Data selection	83
5.4 Data analysis	86
5.4.1 Computer-mediated discourse analysis (CMDA)	86
5.4.2 The coding scheme	88
5.4.3 The qualitative questionnaire	94
5.5 Summary and outlook	94

CHAPTER 6

Power in practice I: Interactional patterns	97
6.1 Introduction	97
6.2 Revisiting the coding scheme: Entry types and discourse moves	97
6.2.1 Entry types	98
6.2.2 Discourse moves and their syntactic realisation	99
6.3 Interactional patterns in the personal/diary blog corpus: An overview	105
6.4 Reader responses to bloggers' posts	108

6.5	Blogger responses to readers	116
6.5.1	The bloggers' practice of commenting	116
6.5.2	Reasons behind the bloggers' practice of commenting	123
6.6	Reader response to readers	125
6.7	Linking forms of responsiveness with conversational roles	130
6.8	Summary	133
CHAPTER 7
	Power in practice II: Topic control		137
7.1	Introduction	137
7.2	Revisiting the coding scheme: Topics and topic control	137
7.3	Topics in personal/diary blog posts	139
7.4	Topics in posts and comments: Overlaps and variation	143
7.5	Bloggers' perceptions on topic maintenance	154
7.6	Summary	159
CHAPTER 8
	Disagreements and agreements in practice I: Characterising the moves		161
8.1	Introduction	161
8.2	Revisiting the coding scheme: Syntax and relational work	161
8.2.1	Syntactic realisation of discourse moves	162
8.2.2	Relational work	162
8.3	Frequency of disagreements and agreements	162
8.3.1	Discourse moves in posts and comments: An overview	164
8.3.2	Disagreements and agreements in the comments sections of the eight personal/diary blogs	168
8.4	Relational work in disagreements and agreements	172
8.5	Bloggers' perceptions on disagreements and agreements	187
8.6	Summary	193
CHAPTER 9
	Disagreements and agreements in practice II: Patterns of interaction, responsiveness and links to power		195
9.1	Introduction	195
9.2	Revisiting the coding scheme: Entry types and discourse moves	196
9.3	Comparing disagreements and agreements as entry types: Rates of responsiveness and implications for the exercise of power	196
9.3.1	Reader responses to bloggers' posts	197
9.3.2	Bloggers' responses to readers' comments	198
9.3.3	Readers' responses to readers' comments	204

9.3.4	“Agreement”, “compliment other”, “disagreement”, “criticism other” and “disagreement and agreement” in the overall comments section and in specific entry types: An overview	210
9.4	The linguistic construction of responsiveness in disagreements and agreements: Revisiting the blogger as favourite recipient	211
9.4.1	Types of linguistic responsiveness in disagreements and agreements	212
9.4.2	Responsiveness and reciprocity	215
9.5	Summary	221
CHAPTER 10
	Concluding remarks	223
10.1	Revisiting the aims and research questions	223
10.2	Limitations	224
10.3	Central findings and research outlook	226
	References	231
APPENDIX I
	Discourse moves with definitions, examples and explanations (presented in groups)	243
APPENDIX II
	Relational work with definitions, examples and explanations (presented in alphabetical order)	255
APPENDIX III
	The qualitative questionnaire	265
	Author index	269
	Subject index	271