

Contents

Introduction — 1

- 1 Discourses of German Femininity in the Long Nineteenth Century — 14
 - 1.1 A review of the conceptualization of women's marginalization and agency — 14
 - 1.2 The rise of discourses of power and dominance — 18
 - 1.3 Case Studies: Positioning exercises in the university in Wilhelm Scherer, August Sauer and Ludwig Geiger's writings on women — 21
 - 1.3.1 August Sauer, defender of Germanness at the South Eastern margins of the German Empire — 21
 - 1.3.2 An integrative force in the dying Habsburg Empire: Sauer's Marie von Ebner-Eschenbach — 23
 - 1.3.3 Ludwig Geiger, a German scholar of Jewish denomination in Berlin — 24
 - 1.3.4 Bettina von Arnim as Geiger's guarantor of German-Jewish understanding — 26
 - 1.3.5 Wilhelm Scherer's defence of Germanness on the western margins of the German Empire — 29
 - 1.3.6 Presenting a female model for the German cultured classes: Wilhelm Scherer's "Caroline" — 31
 - 1.4 Anti-Semitism and women: female, sick, mad, dangerous and Jewish vs. strong, male, rational and German — 37
 - 1.5 Marie von Ebner-Eschenbach on woman's otherness — 40
 - 1.6 Conclusion — 42
- 2 Women's Writing and German Femininity in Literary Histories: Georg Gottfried Gervinus, Rudolph Gottschall and August Vilmar — 44
 - 2.1 Women's position in early literary histories: Gervinus' fear of a female epidemic — 45
 - 2.2 Case Study: absence of gender stereotyping and the politics of the 1840s in Rudolph Gottschall's early poems — 49
 - 2.3 The introduction of gender in Gottschall's Deutsche Nationallitteratur — 51
 - 2.4 The problem with Romantic women: August Vilmar and Rudolph Gottschall — 58
 - 2.5 Conclusion — 61

- 3 The Making of Romantic and Post-Romantic Women Writers in German Literary History: Rahel Varnhagen, Bettina von Arnim and Annette von Droste-Hülshoff — 62
 - 3.1 Shifting positions of women in Gottschall's German literary history project — 64
 - 3.2 Of gnomes and Norns: Bettina von Arnim and Rahel Varnhagen as creative forces in Germany in Gottschall's literary history project 1855 to 1902 — 66
 - 3.3 A wild girl and her master: Bettina von Arnim's role in the nationhood project of August Vilmar, Wilhelm Scherer and Julian Schmidt — 84
 - 3.4 Sick and lying: Julian Schmidt's dissociation of Rahel Varnhagen from Goethe — 86
 - 3.5 A guarantor of German authenticity: Annette von Droste-Hülshoff in Gottschall and Vilmar — 90
 - 3.6 Conclusion — 97

- 4 Emancipation as a National Concern: Fanny Lewald and Louise Aston in German Literary History — 100
 - 4.1 The wrong kind of emancipation: the undoing of Louise Aston in Gottschall's literary history project — 101
 - 4.2 "Die Freidenkerin aus der Stadt der reinen Vernunft": the making of Fanny Lewald in Gottschall's literary history project — 104
 - 4.3 Preserving Fanny Lewald for posterity in Gottschall's literary history project after German Unification — 113
 - 4.4 Women's ways to national harmony: a comparison of Fanny Lewald in Julian Schmidt and Friedrich Kreyßig — 116
 - 4.5 Conclusion — 122

- 5 Gender Dichotomy and Cultural Continuities in Portraits of Women — 124
 - 5.1 The significance of the genre of portraits — 124
 - 5.2 Romantic and post-Romantic 'Frauenbilder': an introduction — 129
 - 5.3 Canonizing Bettina von Arnim — 133
 - 5.3.1 "A modern Mignon" and her grandfather — 133
 - 5.3.2 From Berlin to Rome and from nature to art — 137
 - 5.4 Domesticating Rahel Varnhagen — 141
 - 5.4.1 A woman on the threshold to a new world — 141
 - 5.4.2 Sage, witch or demon? Taming Rahel Varnhagen — 144

- 5.4.3 Women writers on Rahel Varnhagen: Little woman or freedom fighter? — 151
- 5.4.4 Ellen Key's Rahel Varnhagen and the provocation of the German order — 155
- 5.5 Nationalizing Dorothea Schlegel and Fanny Lewald — 160
- 5.5.1 At the German hearth: Ludwig Geiger on Dorothea Schlegel — 160
- 5.5.2 Another Goethe-prophet: Geiger on Fanny Lewald — 165
- 5.6 Conclusion — 167

Conclusion — 170

Bibliography — 181