

Table of contents

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Modal particles and discourse markers: Two sides of the same coin?IntroductionLiesbeth Degand, Bert Cornillie and Paola Pietrandrea     | 1   |
| “Same same but different” – Modal particles, discourse markersand the art (and purpose) of categorizationGabriele Diewald               | 19  |
| A radical construction grammar perspective on the modalparticle-discourse particle distinctionKerstin Fischer and Maria Alm             | 47  |
| Analyzing modal adverbs as modal particles and discourse markersKarin Aijmer  | 89  |
| Modal particles, discourse markers, and adverbs with lt -suffix in EstonianAnnika Valdmets   | 107 |
| Modal particles: Problems in defining a categorySteven Schoonjans   | 133 |
| From TAM to discourse: The role of information statusin North-Western Italian già ‘already’Mario Squartini                       | 163 |
| The fuzzy boundaries between discourse marking and modal markingMaria Josep Cuenca  | 191 |
| From discourse markers to modal/final particles: What the positionreveals about the continuumKatsunobu Izutsu and Mitsuko Narita Izutsu | 217 |
| Index  | 237 |