

Table of Contents

1.	Introduction	1
2.	The mythology of childhood	6
2.1	Childhood Studies	6
2.2	Images of the child and conceptions of childhood	9
2.3	Childhood, gender and genre	20
3.	The socio-cultural context of Victorian childhood	23
4.	Major subject areas of Victorian female childhood accounts: a thematic catalogue	28
5.	Adult-child interaction within the family	29
5.1	Family dynamics: structure and hierarchy, power and psychology	29
5.2	Adult interference: kindness, neglect and despotism	53
5.3	Positive and negative adult-child communication	61
6.	Identity formation: general assumptions about upbringing and education	68
6.1	The role of Divine Providence	69
6.2	The role of environment	72
6.3	Character formation through obedience, discipline and punishment	74
6.4	The importance of physical and mental health	86
6.5	Food as cultural practice and cultural metaphor	117
6.5.1	The nutrition-health-nexus	118
6.5.2	Food as a cultural metaphor	123
7.	Female education	134
7.1	The education-socialization nexus	134
7.2	The construction of femininity: sexual division of labour in the family	137
7.3	Gendered intellectual differences and the female curriculum	143
7.4	The formal training of femininity	158
8.	Religion and religious instruction	182
8.1	Religion in the nineteenth century	182
8.2	Issues of religious doctrine	189
8.3	The religion-education-femininity nexus	194
8.4	Religious socialization	203
8.5	Responses to and effects of religious education	208
8.6	Ethics, morals and doctrine vs. aesthetics, imagination and emotion	216

8.7	The methods of religious instruction	232
8.8	The role of religion	240
9.	The critique of the education system at large	244
9.1	The critique of the contemporary conceptions of child-, girl- and womanhood	248
9.2	The critique of the female curriculum and female accomplishments	254
9.3	The critique of the quality of education	259
9.4	Historical changes and proposals for a new orientation of female education	277
10.	Insights into the psychology of the child	281
10.1	Discovering the hidden lives of children	281
10.2	A child's perception and self-perception: the importance of early childhood recollections	287
10.3	Children's anxieties	292
10.4	Psychological dilemmas	305
11.	Books, reading and child readers	307
11.1	The reading culture of the time	308
11.2	Female reading socialization and the traditional reading canon	312
11.3	Subversion and emancipation through personal reading interests	316
11.4	Individual reader responses	321
11.5	Literature and imagination	324
11.6	The values of reading and the effects and functions of texts	328
12.	Autobiography and childhood	333
12.1	Traditions of self-writing: problems of definition	333
12.2	Childhood and new attempts in women's self-writing	351
12.3	The transformation of a life into a life	353
12.4	The motives of writers and the functions of autobiographies	354
12.5	The importance, role and nature of (childhood) memories	358
13.	The intersection of theme and mode of presentation in the accounts	362
14.	Conclusion: childhood, female identity and autobiography	391
15.	Appendix: Biographical notes on the autobiographers	398
	Bibliography	399