Contents

Acknowledgements

Introduction 1

1 'A subject of which I know so little': George Eliot and political economy 14

2 'Intentions of stern thrift': the formation of a vernacular economics 33

3 'A money-getting profession': negotiating the commerce of literature 52

4 Calculating consequences: Felix Holt and the limits of Utilitarianism 69

5 Testing the Kantian pillars: debt obligations and financial imperatives in Middlemarch 87

6 Being good and doing good with money: incorporating the bourgeois virtues 103

7 The individual and the state: economic sociology in Romola 123

8 The politics of wealth: new liberalism and the pathologies of economic individualism 139

Appendix A: George Eliot's final stock portfolio, 1880 158

Appendix B: Was Edward Tulliver made bankrupt? An analysis of his financial downfall 160

Notes 166

Bibliography 207

Index 222