

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
THE Letter to his Majesty	v
The Address to the Governments and People of all Nations	xi
The Dedication	xv
The Preface	xvii
The Introduction	xxi

CHAP.

- I. The Five Fundamental Facts on which the Rational System is founded 1
- II. "That man is a compound being, whose character is formed of his constitution or organization at birth, and of the effects of external circumstances upon it from birth to death; such original organization and external influences continually acting and re-acting each upon the other" 5
- III. "That man is compelled by his original constitution to receive his feelings and his convictions independently of his will" 7
- IV. "That man's feelings, or his convictions, or both of them united, create the motive to action called the will, which stimulates him to act, and decides his actions" 11
- V. "That the organization of no two human beings is ever precisely similar at birth, nor can art subsequently form any two individuals, from infancy to maturity, to be precisely similar" 16
- VI. "That, nevertheless, the constitution of every infant, except in case of organic disease, is capable of being formed into a very inferior, or a very superior, being, according to the qualities of the external circumstances allowed to influence that constitution from birth" 20

CHAP.	PAGE
VII. The Fundamental Laws of Human Nature, or First Principles of the Science of Man.
SECTION I. "Human Nature is a compound of animal propensities, intellectual faculties, and moral qualities, or the germs of them"	21
SECTION II. "These propensities, faculties, and qualities are united in different proportions in each individual"	23
SECTION III. "This diversity constitutes the original difference between one individual and another"	24
SECTION IV. "These elements of his nature, and their proportions, are made by a power unknown to the individual, and consequently without his consent"	26
SECTION V. "Each individual comes into existence within certain external circumstances, which act upon his peculiar original organization, more especially during the early period of his life, and, by impressing their general character upon him, form his local and national character"	28
SECTION VI. "The influence of these general external circumstances is modified, in a particular manner, by the peculiar organization of each individual; and thus the distinctive character of each is formed and maintained through life"	30
SECTION VII. "No infant has the power of deciding at what period of time, or in what part of the world, he shall come into existence,—of what parents he shall be born,—in what religion he shall be trained,—what manners, customs, or habits, shall be given to him,—or by what other external circumstances he shall be surrounded, from birth to death"	30
SECTION VIII. "Each individual is so organized, that, when young, he may be made to receive either true ideas derived from a knowledge of facts, or false notions derived from the imagination, and in opposition to facts"	34
SECTION IX. "Each individual is so organized, that he must necessarily become irrational when he is made from infancy to receive, as truths, false fundamental notions; and can only become truly rational when he shall be made to receive true fundamental principles, without any admixture of error"	35
SECTION X. "Each individual is so organized that, when young, he may be trained to acquire injurious habits only, or beneficial habits only, or a mixture of both"	37

SECTION XI. "Each individual is so organized, that he must believe according to the strongest conviction that is made upon his mind; which conviction cannot be given to him by his will, nor be withheld by it" . . . 39

SECTION XII. "Each individual is so organized, that he must like that which is pleasant to him, or which, in other words, produces agreeable sensations in him; and dislike that which is unpleasant to him, or which, in other words, produces in him disagreeable sensations; and he cannot know, previous to experience, what particular sensations new objects will produce on any one of his senses" 42

SECTION XIII. "Each individual is so organized, that his feelings and his convictions are formed for him, by the impressions which circumstances produce upon his individual organization" 45

SECTION XIV. "Each individual is so organized, that his will is formed for him by his feelings, or his convictions, or both; and thus his whole character—physical, mental, and moral—is formed independently of himself" 48

SECTION XV. "Each individual is so organized, that impressions, which at their commencement, and for a limited time, produce agreeable sensations, will, if continued without intermission beyond a certain period, become indifferent, disagreeable, and ultimately painful" . 51

SECTION XVI. "Each individual is so organized, that when, beyond a certain degree of rapidity, impressions succeed each other, they dissipate, weaken, and otherwise injure, his physical, mental, or moral powers, and diminish his enjoyment" 53

SECTION XVII. "Each individual is so organized, that his greatest progressive improvement, and his permanent happiness, depend upon the due cultivation of all his physical, intellectual, and moral faculties, or elements of his nature,—upon their being called into action at a proper period of life,—and being afterwards temperately exercised, according to his strength and capacity" . 54

SECTION XVIII. "Each individual is so organized, that he is made to receive what is commonly called a bad character, when he has been placed, from birth, amidst the most unfavourable circumstances" 56

SECTION XIX. "Each individual is so organized, that he is made to receive a medium character, when he has been created with a favourable proportion of the

CHAP.		PAGE
VII.	elements of his nature, and has been placed, from birth, amidst unfavourable circumstances :— “ Or when he has been created with an unfavourable proportion of these elements, and when the external circumstances in which he is placed are of a character to impress him with favourable sensations only :— “ Or when he has been created with a favourable proportion of some of these elements, and an unfavourable proportion of others ; and has been placed, through life, in varied external circumstances, producing some good and some evil sensations. This compound has hitherto been the general lot of mankind”	60
	SECTION XX. “ Each individual is so organized, that he is made to receive a superior character , when his original constitution contains the best proportion of the elements of human nature, and when the circumstances which surround him from birth, and through life, are of a character to produce superior sensations only ; or, in other words, when the laws, institutions, and customs, under which he lives, are all in unison with the laws of his nature”	62
VIII.	Deductions from the preceding Facts and Laws	65
IX.	“ The influence of these facts and laws in forming the general character of the human race, and their effects upon society”	69
X.	The harmony, unity, and efficiency of this Moral Science	72
