

Contents

Acknowledgments	ix
Introduction: The Neurolinguistic Turn	i
1 Aphasia and Neurology in Zola and Proust	17
“la vieille paralytique”	17
“nervous being”	20
“raucous sounds”	26
“menacé d’aphasie”	30
“dissonant voices”	35
“whispered words”	40
2 Speech Disorders and Shell Shock in World War I Writing	47
“Kindred Disorders”	47
“no stammer previous to shock”	51
“You can’t communicate noise”	57
“the new voice from Craiglockhart”	62
3 Stuttering and Sexuality in Woolf, Melville, Kesey, and Mishima	77
“shy and stammering”	77
“organic hesitancy”	84
“m-m-m-m-mamma”	89
“the rusty key”	99
4 Stuttering, Violence, and the Politics of Voice in Robert Graves, Philip Roth, and Gail Jones	105
“vox populi”	105
“though he do limp and stammer a bit”	106
“angry because she stutters”	116
“haltings and erasures”	123

5	Tourettic Speech in Jonathan Lethem's Motherless Brooklyn	131
	"la maladie des tics"	131
	"the world (or my brain – same thing)"	136
	"to tic freely"	141
	"Those walls of language"	149
	"Tourette's muse was with me"	154
	Conclusion: On Speech Disorders in Theory	159
	Notes	165
	Bibliography	205
	Index	219