

Contents

Preface	ix
1 An Interpretation of Our Circumstances		1
Some Aspects of Our Culture	3
Some Aspects of Religion	16
Religious Studies	26
The Theological Scene	31
Preoccupation with Theological Method	62
Christian Ethics	68
Philosophical Ethics	76
Conclusions	82
2 Theocentric Ethics:		87
Is It Ethics in the Traditional Sense?
The Central Reference Point: Man or God?	88
A Moral Pause	99
A Religious and Theological Pause	108
Conclusions	112
3 Convictions and Procedures:		115
An Interlude
Convictions: The Priority of Human Experience	115
Convictions: Religion, "Others," and the "Other"	129
Procedures: Theological Tradition and Development	136
Concluding Reflections	150
4 A Preference for the Reformed Tradition		157
Theology as a Way of Construing the World	158
The Reformed Tradition	163
Problematics in the Reformed Tradition	178
Conclusions	187

5 God in Relation to Man and the World	195
I Religion 196
The Use of Terms 197
“Nonreligious” Experiences and Their Religious Significance 204
Nature 209
History 211
Culture 214
Society 219
The Self 222
The Religious Construal of the Affections and Their Object 225
II God 235
God as Creator 236
God as Sustainer and Governor 238
God as Judge 242
God as Redeemer 247
The Use of Scientific Explanations in the Retrieval and Reconstruction of Theology 251
6 Man in Relation to God and the World	281
“Natural Man” 281
The “Human Fault” 293
The Correction 307
The Christian Religious Context 317
7 Moral Life in Theocentric Perspective	327
Index 343	