

Table of contents

Discourses of helping professions: Concepts and contextualization Eva-Maria Graf, Marlene Sator and Thomas Spranz-Fogasy	1
How practitioners deal with their clients' "off-track" talk Charles Antaki	13
Empathic practices in client-centred psychotherapies: Displaying understanding and affiliation with clients Peter Muntigl, Naomi Knight and Ashley Watkins	33
The interactional accomplishment of feelings-talk in psychotherapy and executive coaching: Same format, different functions? Eva-Maria Graf and Joanna Pawelczyk	59
"Making one's path while walking with a clear head" – (Re-)constructing clients' knowledge in the discourse of coaching: Aligning and dis-aligning forms of clients' participation Marlene Sator and Eva-Maria Graf	91
Form, function and particularities of discursive practices in one-on-one supervision in Germany Yasmin Aksu	123
"I mean is that right?" Frame ambiguity and troublesome advice-seeking on a radio helpline Ian Hutchby	157
Professional roles in a medical telephone helpline Mats Landqvist	179
Anticipatory reactions: Patients' answers to doctors' questions Thomas Spranz-Fogasy	205

“Doctor vs. patient”: Performing medical decision making via communicative negotiations Tim Peters	227
Time pressure and digressive speech patterns in doctor-patient consultations: Who is to blame? Florian Menz and Luzia Plansky	257
Neurologists’ approaches to making psychosocial attributions in patients with functional neurological symptoms Chiara M. Monzoni and Markus Reuber	289
Name index	315
Subject index	319