

Contents

Foreword	9
1. Introduction	12
2. On shifts in emphasis in academic and political debate	15
3. Manpower requirements and the expansion of education	21
3.1 The 'overqualification' thesis	21
3.2 The expansion of higher education and manpower requirement forecasts	22
3.3 Problems of other approaches for determining qualifications requirements	31
3.4 Some conclusions from the debate on qualifications requirements	42
4. Educational expansion and status distribution	58
4.1 Equality of opportunity — issues and tendencies	58
4.2 Does the social hierarchy change as a result of educational expansion?	61
4.3 Problems of interpreting developmental trends in connection with educational expansion	66
5. The relationship between qualification and status distribution	71
5.1 On the growing political explosiveness of status distribution	71
5.2 Historical change in the relationship between qualification and status distribution	75
5.3 Discussion of alternative courses of development and possibilities for adjustment	78
5.4 Some notes on our approach	84
5.5 Problems of the approach and tasks for further research	86

6. Recent trends and developments in the education system	91
6.1 Objectives of the analysis	91
6.2 Changes in the pattern of selection within education	91
6.3 Problems of university admissions	100
6.4 More recent stratification tendencies in higher education	110
7. Political consequences	124
8. Summary and Conclusions	134
Further Reading	137
Index	140