

Contents

Preface and acknowledgements	vii
1 The role of philosophy of the social sciences	1
Appendix 1.1: The notion of fact	11
Appendix 1.2: The notion of value	16
Appendix 1.3: The notion of social reality	18
2 Commonplace explanations	21
3 Generalisations in the social sciences	29
Appendix 3.1: The covering-law model	37
4 Types of historical explanation within the covering-law model	51
5 General explanation in history	61
6 Popper's metascience: theoretical explanation, testability, falsifiability, relations of ideas to facts	71
7 Theoretical, applied, and technological social science	79

8	Are there theories in the social sciences?	85
	Appendix 8.1: Professor Robert Brown's Explanation in Social Science	89
	Appendix 8.2: Friedman on assumptions	91
	Appendix 8.3: Reductionism	94
9	Are the social sciences value-free?	103
10	On finding out what actually happens	107
	Appendix 10.1: Historical construction, reconstruction and the past	113
	Appendix 10.2: The problem of the participant observer	114
11	The present position in philosophy of the social sciences	119
	Appendix 11.1: Popper's philosophy of the social sciences	123
	Appendix 11.2: Why is economics a (relatively) successful social science?	129
	Index	133