

Table of Contents

Preface (Prof. Dr. Ingrid Kasten)	i
Acknowledgements	v
Introduction	1
Chapter 1: Wickram and his times	5
1.1 The sixteenth century as a period of profound change.....	5
1.2 Renaissance and humanism in Italy and Germany.....	8
1.2.1 Renaissance and humanism in Italy: General definition.....	8
1.2.2 Key figures of the Renaissance in Italy.....	11
1.2.3 Renaissance and humanism in Germany	14
1.2.4 German scholars as recipients of the Italian Renaissance.....	16
1.3 Humanism and the Reformation	20
1.3.1 The Reformation in Germany	20
1.3.2 Reformation and Renaissance humanism	24
1.3.2.1 Shared ideals of Reformation and Renaissance humanism	24
1.3.2.2 Differences between humanism and Reformation.....	33
1.4 Vernacular literature in early sixteenth-century Germany	38
1.5 Wickram's biographical details.....	42
Chapter 2: Fortune and God through the ages	49
2.1 Origins: Fortune in Greek and Roman antiquity	49
2.1.1 Greece	49
2.1.2 Rome	51
2.2 Fortune in a Christian framework	54
2.2.1 Augustine	55
2.2.2 Boethius	55
2.2.3 Calvin	59
2.3 Fortune in the Renaissance.....	62
2.3.1 Petrarch	62
2.3.2 Pontano.....	63
2.3.3 Machiavelli.....	65
2.4 Conclusion.....	67

Chapter 3: The relation between Fortune and God in Wickram's narratives (1): Fortune and God as antagonistic sources of character development	69
3.1 Ritter Galmy ("Sir Galmy")	69
3.2 Der Jungen Knaben Spiegel ("Mirror of Young Boys").....	86
3.3 Der Goldfaden ("The Golden Thread")	98
Chapter 4: The relation between Fortune and God in Wickram's narratives (2): Superiority of Fortune vs. superiority of God	115
4.1 Superiority of Fortune over God: Gabriotto und Reinhart ("Gabriotto and Reinhart").....	115
4.2 The banishment of Fortune by God: Von guoten und boesen Nachbaur ("Of Good and Bad Neighbours").....	126
4.3 Wickram and Boethius: Theological versus literary significance of Fortune	143
Chapter 5: Fortune internalised: Wickram's innovation.....	153
5.1 The traditional concept of Fortune as an external, superhuman force	153
5.2 The internalisation of Fortune as a force operating within the human mind.....	162
5.2.1 Ritter Galmy	162
5.2.2 Gabriotto und Reinhart	163
5.2.3 Knabenspiegel	168
5.2.4 Goldfaden	172
5.2.5 Nachbaur	175
5.2.6 Conclusion	176
5.3 The relation between Fortune and individual action.....	180
5.3.1 Gabriotto vs. Goldfaden	180
5.3.2 Galmy	189
5.3.3 Knabenspiegel	192
5.3.4 Von guoten und boesen Nachbaur	194
5.3.5 Conclusion	195

Chapter 6: German and Italian comparisons	199
6.1 Conceptions of Fortune in fifteenth- and sixteenth-century German fiction.....	199
6.1.1 Giovanni Boccaccio/ Niklas von Wyle: die histori von sigismunda (“The Story of Sigismunda”)	199
6.1.2 Thüring von Ringoltingen: Melusine	202
6.1.3 Fortunatus	204
6.1.4 Sebastian Brant: Das Narrenschiff (“The Ship of Fools”)	207
6.1.5 Hans Sachs: Das waltzend Glück (“Revolving Fortuna”).....	212
6.2 Italian models	215
6.2.1 Poggio Bracciolini.....	215
6.2.2 Enea Silvio Piccolomini.....	219
6.3 Wickram’s originality	226
Chapter 7: Wickram and Petrarch: The psychological conception of Fortune	229
7.1 The German translation of De remediis utriusque fortunae	229
7.2 Petrarch’s psychological conception of Fortune in Von der Artzney	232
7.3 Comparison of Petrarch’s and Wickram’s conception of Fortune.....	238
7.3.1 Parallel episodes in Wickram and Petrarch.....	238
7.3.2 Similarities between Fortune in Petrarch and Wickram	241
7.3.3 Differences between Wickram and Petrarch.....	248
7.4 Interaction between Italian Renaissance and German Reformation	252
7.5 Conclusion.....	258
Bibliography	261
Index	271