

Contents

List of Figures and Boxes	xi
1. Mundane Governance: A Profound Question of Political Philosophy?	1
1.1 Introduction	1
1.2 Narratives of Mundane Governance	3
1.2.1 The Omnipresence of the Mundane	3
1.2.2 The Significance of the Mundane	4
1.2.3 The Morality of the Mundane	5
1.2.4 Irony, Incongruity, and the Exoticism of the Ordinary	6
1.2.5 Ironies of Mundane Governance as Social–Political Analysis	7
1.2.6 Schadenfreude about Failures of Mundane Governance	10
1.3 Some Initial Analytic Themes	12
1.4 Principles for Researching the Mundane	14
1.5 Structure of our Argument	19
2. The Wrong Bin Bag: The Situated Ontology of Mundane Governance	21
2.1 Introduction	21
2.2 Governance and Accountability	22
2.2.1 Corporate Governance	22
2.2.2 Neo-Foucauldian Approaches to Governance	25
2.2.3 Accountability	30
2.2.4 The Effects of Governance and Accountability	35
2.3 The Ontological Dynamics of Governance and Accountability	37
2.3.1 Objects and Technology in Science and Technology Studies	38
2.3.2 Enrolling Latour to Recursive Ontology	40
2.4 The Wrong Bin Bag	46
2.5 Conclusion	53
3. Classification as Governance: Typologies of Waste	55
3.1 Introduction	55
3.2 Governance through Classification and Accountability	56

Contents

3.3 A Background to Waste Management	58
3.4 Waste Management in Action	64
3.4.1 The Local Waste Management Centre	65
3.4.2 Kerbside Recycling	69
3.5 Analysis: Governance, Accountability, and Classification	74
3.6 Conclusion	77
4. Why Govern?—Is, Ought, and Actionability in Mundane Governance	79
4.1 Introduction	79
4.2 Evidence, Is and Ought	80
4.3 Constituting Evidence as ‘Is’, ‘Ought’, and Actionable	86
4.4 Evidence in Action	92
4.5 Actionable Evidence	98
4.5.1 Morally Actionable Evidence	99
4.5.2 Evidence in Action?	101
4.5.3 A New Guillotine?	102
4.6 Conclusion	104
5. Structures of Governance	107
5.1 Introduction	107
5.2 Constituting the Speeding Driver	110
5.3 Constituting Structures of Governance	114
5.3.1 Invoking a Standard Governance Structure	115
5.3.2 Invoking Non-Standard Structures of Governance	119
5.3.3 Setting Camera Speed Limits	123
5.3.4 Installing Cameras	125
5.4 Reconstituting Structures of Governance through Communication	128
5.5 Conclusion	132
6. Compliance: Does Mundane Governance Work?	135
6.1 Introduction	135
6.2 Compliance in Theory	137
6.3 Managing Compliance in Practice	141
6.3.1 Three Varieties of Compliance	141
6.3.2 Consistency of Compliance	147
6.4 Re-educating the Speeding Driver	153
6.5 Conclusion	163
7. Spaces of Governance	166
7.1 Introduction	166
7.2 Governance and Space	167

7.3 A London Airport	172
7.3.1 Architecture	173
7.3.2 Wayfinding Technologies	175
7.3.3 Radio-Frequency Identification and Biometrics	177
7.4 Airport Passengers	179
7.4.1 Airport Managers' Accounts of Passengers	179
7.4.2 Passengers' Accounts	180
7.4.3 Passenger Ethnographies	182
A. Joining Queues	182
B. Electronic Check-In	183
C. Making Routine Mistakes	185
D. Objects and their People	186
E. Shopping First, then Flying	187
F. Boarding the Plane	188
G. Travelling Elite	189
7.5 Conclusion	191
8. Mundane Terror	194
8.1 Introduction	194
8.2 Ontology and Security	195
8.3 Objects and their Passengers	196
8.4 Letter Bombs	200
8.5 Biometric Identity Cards	207
8.6 Analysis	215
8.7 Conclusion	218
9. Disruption	220
9.1 Introduction	220
9.2 Disruptions and Breaches	222
9.3 The Water Bottle	223
9.4 Traffic Lights Failure	226
9.5 Parking is Such Sweet Sorrow	230
9.6 Speeding Database	238
9.7 Analysis	242
9.8 Conclusion	246
10. Conclusions	248
10.1 Introduction	248
10.2 Revisiting Narratives of Mundane Governance	249
10.3 Partial Takes and Coherent Accounts	256
10.4 Outstanding Issues	260
10.5 Futures of Mundane Governance	263

Contents

References	267
Index	277