

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Preface and acknowledgements	page	xii
Tables and diagrams		xiv
Abbreviations and symbols		xv
CHAPTER 1	TRANSITIVITY, COGNATENESS AND INTRODUCTORY
	NOTES	1
1.0	Introduction	1
2.0	Aspects of transitivity	4
3.0	Cognateness and the Hopper and Thompson (1980) continuum	10
3.1	Additional data and Hopper and Thompson (1980) transitivity continuum	17
4.0.	The fallacy of the modifying adjunct hypothesis of locative NPs	20
5.0.	A paradox of reduced transitivity	23
6.0	Definiteness in Bantu and the Hopper and Thompson (1980) continuum	34
6.1	Definiteness and individuation of nouns and pronouns in Bantu	43
7.0	Scope of the study	45
CHAPTER 2	APPARENT DIFFICULTIES IN PN-S DESCRIPTIONS
	IN KISWAHILI BANTU	54
1.0	Introduction	54
2.0	Principles and assumptions of the study	54
2.1	Transitivity system	54
2.2	Complement system	56
2.3	Relativity system of Kiswahili and Bantu	58
2.3.1	Relative subordinate-main clause dependency	58
2.4	Statistically central versus peripheral prototypes	58
2.5	Transitivity function of predicates and their Pn-Ss	62
3.0	Assumptions about clause or predication-sentence structure	65
3.1	The constituent category elements of Pn-S or clause	66
3.2	On the nature of complements of predicates	67
3.2.1	Why we reject agreement taking adverbs, adverbial phrases and adjuncts	68
3.3	Methodological principles in Pn-S or clause descriptions	70
3.4	On underspecification in clause structure analysis	73
3.5	On single and multiple object constructions	81
3.6	Further observations on Ashton's (1947) nominal construction	88
3.7.	Ashton's (1947) one DO per transitive Pn-S and the DO of RG and FG	92
4.0	Further limitations on clause or Pn-S descriptions	98
4.1	Schadeberg's (1992) Participant versus non-participant objects	99
4.2	Some paradoxes of objecthood in Kiswahili Bantu	103

CHAPTER 3	TRANSITIVES DESCRIBED AS INTRANSITIVES IN KISWAHILI BANTU	113
1.0	Introduction	113
2.0	On complements and objects in Kiswahili Bantu	114
3.0	A summary of assumptions of the chapter	119
3.1	The subordinate and main clause paradox in Kiswahili Bantu	119
3.2	An illustration of the subordinate and main clause paradox	121
3.3	Do all object NPs/MPs undergo relativization in transitive strings?	135
3.4	A tentative distinction between Complement NPs/MPs and object NPs/MPs	139
4.0	The paradox of idiomatic VPs or V + NP complexes	141
5.0	Data that display features of the object NP in Kiswahili: historic and synchronic	149
5.1	Objecthood, felicity and grammaticality in Kiswahili Bantu	153
5.2	Object NPs and dual transitivity revisited	155
5.3	A focus on five select predicate verbs	158
6.0	Two paradoxes of transitive arguments	164
7.0	Conclusion	168
CHAPTER 4	ON SUBJECT AND OBJECT TRANSPOSITIONS IN KISWAHILI BANTU	171
1.0	Introduction	171
1.1	Agents in modern linguistic studies	173
1.2	The principle of transposition	176
1.3	The operation of transposition in Kiswahili Bantu	178
2.0	Subject and object transposition and the status of AGENT in passive syntax	182
2.1	Kiswahili Bantu internal syntax versus Indo-European internal syntax	184
2.2	Object relativization as an anomaly of the adverbial or adjunct phrase hypothesis	189
3.0	On controller and controlled arguments	196
3.1	On the optional deletion of extended predicates in passive syntax	197
4.0	Subject and object transposition and the status of AGENT in reflexive syntax	207
4.1	Some comments on traditional grammatical practices and reflexive theory	214
5.0	Subject and object transposition in active non-reflexive syntax	220
5.1	Additional data on subject and object transposition	225
5.1.1	More data on subject and object transposition	232
5.2	Examples containing the possessive copular predicate -na 'have, be with'	234
6.0	Underlying versus surface syntax of the possessive predicate -na 'have, be with'	244

7.0	Subject and object NP transposition that may or may not leave theta roles behind	248
7.0.1	Perceptions of theta role	251
7.1	Data on subject and object transposition based on -pata 'get'	252
8.0	Object marker and transposition syntax	258
9.0	Logical relations in possession Pn-Ss	260
CHAPTER 5 THE USE OF THE PREDICATE VERB -ENDA 'GO' IN KISWAHILI BANTU		271
1.0	Introduction	271
2.0	Predicate verbs and contextual specialization	271
3.0	The citation form and infinitive form	278
4.0	Notes on the predicate verb -enda 'go'	288
5.0	Basic senses and contextual specializations of -enda	296
6.0	Further uses of the predicate verb -enda	305
7.0	Conclusion	315
CHAPTER 6 THE OBJECT NP AND PASSIVE SYNTAX		317
1.0	Introduction	317
2.0	Basic passivization syntax	323
3.0	Fowler's VP-dominated NP with object and VP-dominate NP without object	328
4.0	Some weaknesses in Fowler's (1971) passive measure of object status	331
4.1	The objecthood of agreement-generating P-nPs	335
5.0	Derived subjects of PCs that are not passives: the ergative alternative	337
6.0	Morphological markers of functional relations in Pn-Ss	339
6.1	Alternative strategies for PC complements that do not generate POMs	343
6.2	Further observations on PC complements that do not generate POMs	348
6.2.1	Vitale's verb-NP complex: an illustration of pitfalls of phrasal verb models	356
6.2.2	The object relativization of demoted 'agentive' NP	364
6.2.3	Object, passivization and reflexivization	366
7.0	Entailment syntax and objecthood	367
8.0	Further pitfalls of the PC-dominated NP hypothesis	372
8.1	On NPs that resist passivization	372
8.2	The paradox of languages without passives	373
9.0	The paradox of direct objects in Kiswahili Bantu	378
9.1	Are objects of ditransitives omissible?	385
9.2	Redundancy: indirect object versus oblique object in Kiswahili Bantu	391
10.0	Syntactic categories, discourse syntax, and adjunct subjects	400
10.1	Additional comments on topic subject	402

10.2	Additional comments on adjunct subject	403
11.0	Passive construction without a counterpart in an active construction	405
12.0	Conclusion	411
CHAPTER 7 A SYNTAX OF PASSIVIZATION: A RE-ANALYSIS BASED ON KISWAHILI
1.0	Introduction	417
1.1	Two types of transitive constructions	417
2.0	Symmetric versus asymmetric object languages	419
3.0	Whiteley's (1968) principle of entailment	422
3.1	An illustration of Whiteley's principle of entailment	424
3.1.1	An advantage of Whiteley's principle for transitivity	425
3.1.2	Some disadvantages of the principle of entailment	428
3.2	A revision of Whiteley's (1968) principle of entailment	432
4.0	Towards a new approach to passivization	434
5.0	Radical passivization based on Kiswahili Bantu	443
5.1	An illustration of radical passivization based on Kiswahili Bantu	445
5.2	Unaccusativity and radical passivization	449
6.0	The demoted subject NP in radical passive syntax	456
7.0	Additional remarks on NP movements in multiple object constructions	458
8.0	Two pieces of data on multiple object construction	461
9.0	Some additional insights into Bantu syntax	463
10.0	Conclusion	467
CHAPTER 8 ARE THERE COMPLEMENT ADVERBIALS IN BANTU PREDICATION-SENTENCES? A STUDY OF KISWAHILI COPULAS
1.0	Introduction	470
1.1	Complements in linguistic description revisited	472
2.0	Complements and transitivity revisited	474
3.0	Are there non-adjunctive complement adverbials in Kiswahili Pn-Ss?	480
4.0	A note on the defective copula li 'be' and the tense-taking copula wa 'be'	506
5.0	Inversion of copular constructions as an anomaly in locative inversion theories	509
6.0	Karibu 'proximity, proximate' and mbali 'distance, distinct'	515
7.0	Are nominal adjuncts adverbials in Kiswahili Bantu?	524
8.0	The complement adverbials of Kiswahili Bantu	529
8.1	Nominal P-nP/PP versus adverbial P-aP/PP complements	543
9.0	Concluding remarks and additional data	547
9.1	On subject adverbials or adverbial subjects	555
10.0	Conclusion	562

CHAPTER 9	PP ARGUMENTS IN KISWAHILI BANTU TRANSITIVITY REVISITED	567
1.0	Introduction	567
1.1	Endocentric versus exocentric PPs	569
1.2	Subject and object P-nPs/PPs	573
1.3	Definitional preliminaries	573
2.0	Oblique object as a core argument in Kiswahili Bantu	574
3.0	Non-dative versus dative patterns of the predicate -pokea	582
3.1	On the trail of the dative pattern	592
4.0	Alternation and choice in patterns of the predicate -omba	599
4.1	Additional data on the predicate -omba	609
5.0	The redundant nature of indirect object versus oblique object in Bantu	617
5.1	P-nP/PP subjects and objects in Kiswahili Bantu	618
6.0	Some remarks and observations about the data	628
6.1	P-nP/PP subject and/or object data from Farsi (1958/1979) and others	631
6.2	P-nP/PP subject and/or object data from Shafi (2003)	633
7.0	Conclusion	638
	Bibliography	640