

Contents

Acknowledgements 1

Introduction 3

Chapter I ‘Here is the stock exchange and the money, and the love of art.’

An introduction to the Golden Age of Amsterdam and its history painting 7

Amsterdam, centre of the world – centre of painting 7

Amsterdam, the new centre for history painting 14

Clustering 16

Competition, reputation and value 19

Rembrandt and his competition 22

Chapter II Great ambitions and stunning innovations

Newcomers etting in Amsterdam: Rembrandt, Jacob Backer, Govert Flinck,

Joachim von Sandrart and Bartholomeus Breenbergh 23

Chapter II, Part A Rembrandt and Sandrart 25

Rembrandt (1606–1669) in Amsterdam during the 1630s and 1640s 25

Acquiring fame 25

The conoscenti on the Keizersgracht 38

Competing with Rubens, Van Dyck, Caravaggio and Ribera: The Blinding of Samson 42

A scene of horror 49

Misjudging social relations 50

The Passion series and the Stadholder. Reputation and the value of art 52

Rembrandt’s manner 59

Joachim von Sandrart (1606–1688): A cosmopolitan gentleman-painter in Amsterdam, 1637–1645 71

Rembrandt and Sandrart 71

An entirely different type of painter 71

Sandrart on Rembrandt and different notions about the nobility of art 76

Sandrart’s art: as different as possible 79

Competition in the Kloveniersdoelen 90

Chapter II, Part B Flinck, Backer and Breenbergh 97

Govert Flinck (1615–1660): from pupil to pinnacle, 1633–c. 1649 97

Flinck at the Kloveniersdoelen: competing with Rembrandt by looking at Rubens 97

From follower of fashion to instigator of a ‘clear’ manner 99

A well-mannered ‘Apelles’ who knew how to use his networks 108

Jacob Adriaensz Backer (1608–1651) in Amsterdam, 1633–1651 110

Another outsider with a highly successful start 110

Painter of ‘large, modern paintings, much from life’ 114

A classicist influenced by changing taste? 121

Bartholomeus Breenbergh (1598–1657) in Amsterdam, c. 1630–1657 127

From the province to Amsterdam to Rome and back 127

Making the most of his Roman experience while adapting to Amsterdam preferences 129

But who owned his paintings? 144

Chapter III A network of moderately successful Amsterdam natives

Claes Moyaert, Adriaen van Nieulandt, Isaac Isaacsz and Salomon Koninck 149

- Claes Cornelisz Moyaert (c. 1591–1655): his most productive period, c. 1630–1655 150
  - An Amsterdam native of an older generation specializing in ‘Lastman lite’ 150
  - Sticking to his own type of paintings 152
  - A competent painter at the right place and the right time for some important commissions 159
  - Moyaert’s audience? 169
- Adriaen van Nieulandt (1586–1658): his later career, c. 1630–1650 174
  - A successful early career in Amsterdam as pupil of Pieter Isaacsz and Frans Badens 174
  - Continuing ‘old-fashioned’ styles in the decades of great innovations (1630–1655) 176
  - Working at a modest level 185
- Isaac Isaacsz (1599–1649): his Amsterdam career, c. 1625–1649 189
  - Destined to be a painter and, in principle, well connected 189
  - The first Rubens-adept in Amsterdam, but with moderate success 193
- Salomon Koninck (1609–1656): his Amsterdam career until c. 1650 199
  - Impressed by Rembrandt’s early manner and successful with elite connoisseurs 199
  - Defining his position in relation to the celebrated master 202
  - A valued artist 209

Chapter IV Of modest masters and cheap production

David Colijns, Rombout van Troyen, Daniël Thivart, Jan Micker and others 215

- David Colijns (1581/1582–1665): his career as a history painter, c. 1626–1650 215
  - The oldest painter with the longest career 215
  - A jack of all trades: disparate works and deft borrowings 216
  - Colijns’s clients 223
- Rombout van Troyen (1605–1657?): his career from c. 1630 to c. 1655 226
  - An artist with a large and idiosyncratic production at the lower end of the art market 226
  - Creepy caverns, sacrifices, and scenes of horror 228
  - The star of modest collections: recognizable but of little value 234
- Daniël Thivart (c. 1611–1656?): active c. 1635–1655 239
  - Son of a manufacturer – art dealer, but difficult to place 239
  - A painter with unexpected abilities 239
  - Small history paintings, rapidly produced 242
- Jan Micker (1598/1599–1664): active c. 1630–1655 (?) 247
  - Art dealers and the cheap mass production of history paintings 247
  - Simple in manner and composition, sometimes original in subjects, but never imitating others 247
- Minor masters of whom we know almost nothing 259
  - Guilliam du Gardijn (1596/1597–after 1647) 259
  - Johannes Urselincx (1599–1664) 261
  - Jan Barentsz Muyckens (1595–1665?) 264
  - Hans Creupelbeen (1587/1588–after 1650?) 265
  - Thijs Wijertsz Niedorp (1610/1620?–1678?) 267

Chapter v An occasional history painting by specialists in other fields:

Thomas de Keyser, Nicolaes Eliasz Pickenoy, Dirck Dircksz Santvoort, Pieter Codde, and Pieter Potter 271

- Thomas de Keyser (1596/1597–1667) as a history painter in the 1630s 272
A portraitist with an extensive network through his family 272
De Keyser and Rembrandt: two artists updating Lastman, but in radically contrasting ways 273
A Roman Catholic clientele for his history paintings 284
- Nicolaes Eliasz Pickenoy (1588–1650/1656): history paintings in the 1630s 285
Portraitist of the Amsterdam elite 285
A surprisingly novel style with the support of old prints 285
- Dirck Dircksz Santvoort (1609–1680): history paintings from the 1630s 293
From a well-to-do family of artists 293
Rembrandt's early manner in a simplified version 294
- Pieter Codde (1599–1678): history paintings c. 1630 to 1655 295
A prosperous genre painter on the Anthoniebreestraat 297
A dash of comedy in some popular mythological subjects 298
A dramatic scene of sacrifice 307
- Pieter Symonsz Potter (1597/1601–1652): history paintings, c. 1630 to 1655 311
Moving around and trying out many things, but never truly successful 311
A minor master with a highly talented son 313

Chapter vi Two minor masters looking at Rembrandt

Willem Bartsius and Gerrit Willemsz Horst 321

- Willem Bartsius (c. 1612 – after 1639): active in the 1630s 321
Pieter Potter's brother-in-law from a respectable family 321
Youthful ambition and remarkable originality: a promise unfulfilled 321
- Gerrit Willemsz Horst (c. 1612/1613–1652): active in the 1630s and 1640s 328
A mediocre follower of the early Flinck and Bol 328

Chapter vii A younger generation of talented artists starting out around 1640

The early careers of Ferdinand Bol, Gerbrand van den Eeckhout and Jan Victors, and the beginning of the Amsterdam careers of Jacob van Loo and Jan Lievens 333

- Ferdinand Bol (1616–1680): his early career, c. 1640–1650 334
Rembrandt's pupil, but an outsider in Amsterdam 334
Ambitious paintings to please the eye 336
- Gerbrand van den Eeckhout (1621–1674): his early career, c. 1640–1650 346
An insider in Amsterdam but truly Rembrandt's pupil? 346
Youthful rivalry with Bol and Victors, and updating Lastman, Venant, and Moyaert 348
Export to Protestant German cities? 359
- Jan Victors (1619–1676): his early career, c. 1640–1650 362
An orthodox Calvinist with a strange career 362
Lastman and Rembrandt transformed into large, easily readable 'vertoningen' 364
Calvinist merchants and wealthy Jews? 372
- The Amsterdam careers of Jacob van Loo and Jan Lievens as history painters before 1650 375
Jacob van Loo (1614–1670): the mystery of his early oeuvre 374
Jan Lievens (1607–1674): boundless ambition and serious shortcomings 379

Chapter VIII Summarizing epilogue 385

About the painters and their pursuits 385

Some remarks on subject matter 395

Price levels 396

To conclude 399

Notes 401

Bibliography 451

Index I Names of persons and works of art 469

Index II Subjects of works of art 482