

Preface xi
Acknowledgments xv
A Note on Texts, Dates, and Money xvii

CHAPTER I Canonical and Noncanonical Satire, 1658–1770: Some Questions of Definition, Aims, and Method 1

I. The “Definition” Quagmire and the Problem of Descriptive Terminology 2
 II. Genre versus Mode 5
 III. The Modern Critical Canon and Its Implications 8
 IV. The Total Satire Canon and Its Economic Context 14
     The Production of Satire in England, 1658–1770 14
     Price, Format, Dissemination, and Implied Audiences 20
 V. Some Issues of Coverage and Organization 26
 VI. The Uses of a Taxonomic Methodology 30
     The Varieties of Satire 31
     Forecasting Some Conclusions 33
     The Nature of the Enterprise 37

CHAPTER 2 Contemporary Views on Satire, 1658–1770 39

I. Concepts of Satire 40
     “Satire”: Etymology and Terminology 40
     Definition by Contrast 42
 II. The Business of Satire 43
     The Opposition to Satire 44
     The Case for Satire 48
 III. The Practice and Province of Satire 53
     Acceptable and Problematical Satiric Methods 54
     Appropriate and Inappropriate Satiric Targets 57
 IV. Characterizing the Satirist 62
 V. Perceptions of Eighteenth-Century Satire Then and Now 65

CHAPTER 3 Satire in the Carolean Period	70
I. Some Preliminary Considerations: Realities versus Assumptions	72
II. Dryden, Rochester, Buckingham	74
Carolean Dryden: Lampoonist, Social Commentator, Propagandist	75
Rochester: Skeptical, Provocative, Negative	79
Buckingham's Purposive Satire	82
III. Marvell, Ayloffe, Oldham	86
Marvell as Polemical Satirist	86
Ayloffe's Antimonarchical Diatribes	88
Oldham's Juvenalian Performances	89
IV. Hudibras and Other Camouflage Satires	92
V. Personal and Social Satire: From Lampoons to Otway and Lee	97
VI. Chronological Change, 1658–1685	101
VII. Issues: Satiric Intensity, Tone, Positives—and the Problem of Application	104
Intensity	104
Tone	105
Presentation of Positives	108
The Problem of Application	110
VIII. The Discontinuous World of Carolean Satire	111
CHAPTER 4 Beyond Carolean: Satire at the End of the Seventeenth Century	113
I. Altered Circumstances	115
II. Dryden as Satirist, 1685–1700	119
III. Poetic Satire	126
Tutchin, Defoe, and Political Satire	127
Gould and Defamatory Satire	130
Garth and Blackmore	133
Brown, Ward, and Commercial Satire	136
IV. Dramatic Satire	139
Shadwell and Exemplary Comedy	140
Mitigated Satire: Cibber, Vanbrugh, Farquhar	143
Harsh Social Satire: Congreve and Southerne	145
V. The State of Satire ca. 1700	148
CHAPTER 5 Defoe, Swift, and New Varieties of Satire, 1700–1725	150
I. Defoe as Satirist	153
Attack and Defense	154
Instruction and Direct Warning (Aimed at the Audience)	155
Indirect Exposure and Discomfiture	156
II. Religious and Political Satire	158
Topical Controversy	158
Monitory Satire in the Manner of Defoe	161
Ideological Argumentation: Dunton, Defoe, and Others	165

III. Social and Moral Satire	168
Generalized Satire	168
Didactic Satire in the Manner of Steele	169
Particularized and Topical Satire	171
Argument and Inquiry: Mandeville and Prior	172
IV. The Alleged "Scriblerians"	174
V. Swift before Gulliver	180
Jokiness and Play	181
Destruction and Negativity	182
Purposive Defamation and Defense	183
Indirection and Difficult Satire	186
VI. Characterizing the Early Eighteenth Century	191

CHAPTER 6 Harsh and Sympathetic Satire, 1726–1745 194

I. Pope and Swift among Their Contemporaries	196
Political Commentary and Combat	197
The Culture Wars	201
Social Satire	205
II. Pope, Swift, Gay	209
Pope	209
Swift	211
Gay	214
III. The Problem of Meaning in Gulliver's Travels	220
IV. Fielding and the Move toward Sympathetic Satire	226
Playful Satire and Entertainment	227
Provocation and Preachment	227
Distributive Justice: Joseph Andrews and Tom Jones	229
Fielding's Concept of Satire	231
Sympathetic Satire	234
V. Alive and Well: The State of Satire at Midcentury	237

CHAPTER 7 Churchill, Foote, Macklin, Garrick, Smollett, Sterne, and Others, 1745–1770 239

I. The Rise of "Poetic" Satire	241
Frivolity and Entertainment	242
Moral Preachment	243
Particularized Attack	244
Poeticized Satire	246
Churchill's Nonpolitical Satire	248
II. Wilkes, Churchill, and Political Controversy in the 1760s	250
The North Briton	250
Churchill's Political Satire	251
Visual Satire	253
Wilkes's Essay on Woman	254

III. Satire in the Commercial Theater	255
Social Comedy	256
Lightweight Afterpiece Entertainment	259
Samuel Foote	261
Charles Macklin	265
David Garrick	269
IV. Satire in the Mid-Eighteenth-Century Novel	273
Smollett's Dark Satire	274
The Late Career of Fielding	276
Tristram Shandy and the Singularity of Sterne	278
Charlotte Lennox, Oliver Goldsmith, Sarah Fielding: Satire and Sentiment	283
V. Satire for a Stable Era	286

Epilogue: Toward a New History of English Satire, 1658–1770 289

I. Motives and Modes	290
II. Remapping English Satire, 1658–1770	298

Appendix: Standard Price Categories and Sample Titles 305

Notes 313

Bibliography 355

Index 411