Contents

Pre	eface		vi
Lis	t of f	igures	хi
List of tables List of maps
1	Int	roduction	1
	1.1	Subject-matter and central claims	1
	1.2	Emerging modals and emergent grammar	4
	1.3	Organization of the individual chapters	5
2	The	eoretical, methodological and empirical foundations	7
	2.1	Chapter outline	7
	2.2	Functionalism, economy, frequency	7
		Grammaticalization	11
		2.3.1 Early proponents of grammaticalization theory	12
		2.3.2 The Cologne project: Lehmann, Heine and associates	13
		2.3.3 Recent developments	15
	2.4	Contact-induced change and sociolinguistic dialectology	18
	2.5	A corpus-based approach	21
	2.6	Scope and aims	22
		2.6.1 Scope	22
		2.6.2 Aims	28
	2.7	The sources of the present study	29
		2.7.1 Historical corpora	30
		2.7.2 Corpora of contemporary English	33
		2.7.3 Methodological caveats	37
	2.8	Defining modality and auxiliarihood	39
		2.8.1 Definitional issues	39
	_	2.8.2 Properties of English auxiliaries and modals	43
	2.9	The relevance of the history of English central modals to the study of emerging modals	44
	2.10	Previous research on emerging modals	45
		2.10.1 Largely descriptive approaches	46
		2.10.2 The contraction debate	47

3	HAVE GOT TO/GOTTA and HAVE TO/HAFTA	53
	3.1 Chapter outline	53
	3.2 History and grammatical (re-)analysis	53
	3.2.1 HAVE TO	53
	3.2.2 HAVE GOT TO	61
	3.3 Increase in discourse frequency	74
	3.3.1 Long-term trends: ARCHER	76
	3.3.2 Short-term trends	83
	3.4 Syntax and semantics of HAVE TO and HAVE GOT TO	89
	3.4.1 Mechanisms of grammaticalization	89
	3.4.2 Present-day properties	103
	3.5 Stylistic variation	109
	3.6 Regional variation	111
	3.7 Summary	114
4	WANT TO and WANNA	117
	4.1 Chapter outline	117
	4.2 The rise of WANT: Increase in discourse frequency a	nd
	changing patterns of complementation	118
	4.2.1 Old and Middle English: From impersonal to transitive use	119
	4.2.2 Early Modern and Modern English	127
	4.2.3 Present-day English	134
	4.3 Semantic developments	141
	4.3.1 The evolution of volitional modality	141
	4.3.2 Extension to other modal meanings	147
	4.4 Phonological and morphosyntactic developments w
	present-day English	152
	4.4.1 Variation and concomitant obscuration of infin
	4.4.2 Abnormal time reference and ellipsis in co-ord
	4.4.3 Further emerging properties	157
	4.5 Social and stylistic variation in the British National	-
	4.6 Regional variation in the British National Corpus	163
	4.7 Summary	165
5	Models and motivations for emerging English modals	s 167
	5.1 Chapter outline	167

	5.2	Frequency	168
		5.2.1 Early Modern English to present-day English	168
			174
		5.2.3 Autonomous discourse?	178
		5.2.4 String frequency and the contraction debate	181
	5.3	Mechanisms and pathways of change	183
			183
		5.3.2 Semantic changes	184
,		5.3.3 Regional diffusion	185
		5.3.4 Sex	192
	5.4	Towards a model for natural change in spoken and written
		text types	194
	5.5	The marginal modals NEED (TO), OUGHT (TO) and DARE (TO)	199
		5.5.1 DARE (TO)	200
		5.5.2 NEED TO	202
		5.5.3 OUGHT TO	204
	5.6	Motivations	206
		5.6.1 Expressivity, layering, processing constraints	206
		5.6.2 Iconicity and economy: Competing motivations?	208
	5.7	Gravitation and categorization	214
		5.7.1 Why introduce a new category?	214
		5.7.2 An 'Iconicity of Grammatical Categories Principle'	217
		5.7.3 Categorization in grammaticalization and related frameworks	222
		5.7.4 Gravitation theory	225
		5.7.5 Operationalization of the gravitation model	228
	5.8	Some implications of the gravitation model	239
		5.8.1 DO support for BE GOING TO and HAVE GOT TO	240
		5.8.2 Why WANT?	242
		5.8.3 Implications for grammaticalization theory	242
		5.8.4 Inadequacies of the model, possible refinements and wider applications	245
6	Con	nclusion	249
Not	es		259
	Notes Appendices
Appendices
References
ınde	ndex 3					