Contents

Introduction 11

1 Speech-act taxonomy: a critical review 15
1.1 Speech act taxonomy in mainstream speech-act theory 16
1.2 A critique of Searle's semantic classification and of alternative proposals ... 23
1.2.1 A partial characterization of the notion 'taxonomy' 24
1.2.2 A critique of Searle's semantic classification 27
1.2.3 A critique of alternative semantic classifications 39
1.3 A critique of syntactic classifications of illocutionary verbs 69
1.4 Further inadequacies in speech-act theory 76
1.5 Conclusion 81

2 From speech-act theory to cognitive semantics 83
2.1 A cognitive alternative 83
2.1.1 The objectivist orientation of speech-act theory 83
2.1.2 The empirical-conceptual approach to verbal communication 91
2.1.3 On illocutions and illocutionary verbs 95
2.2 Aspects of Cognitive Grammar 103
2.2.1 Grammar 103
2.2.2 Semantic structure 104
2.2.3 Categorization 110
2.2.4 Nouns and verbs, nominals and clauses 112
2.2.5 Grammatical constructions 118
2.3 Illocutionary verbs in Cognitive Grammar 121
2.4 The data 127
2.5 Conclusion 133

3 Clausal complementation of illocutionary verbs 135
3.1 The conceptual basis of complementation 136
3.2 Dimensions of variation 139
3.2.1 From verbs to nouns 139
3.2.2 From clauses to stems 140
3.2.3 Conclusion 154
3.3 Direct-speech constructions 157
3.3.1 Clause structure 157
3.3.2 The quoted clause as object or adverb 162
3.3.3 Conclusion 165
3.4 That-clauses 166

3.4.1 Assertive verbs 166
3.4.2 Commissive verbs 175
3.4.3 Directive verbs 180
3.4.4 Expressive verbs 187
3.4.5 Conclusion 188
3.5 Infinitival complements 190
3.5.1 Assertive verbs 190
3.5.2 Commissive verbs 197
3.5.3 Directive verbs 201
3.5.4 Expressive verbs 206
3.5.5 Conclusion 207
3.6 Participial complements 208
3.7 Gerundival complements 213
3.8 Conclusion 218
4 Conclusion 229
References 237