Preface . . . . .	v
Part One: Meaning . . . . .	1
1. Introduction . . . . .	3
2. Meaning and the pursuit of knowledge: the world behind the word . . . . .	5
2.1. Introduction . . . . .	5
2.2. Plato on language and ideas . . . . .	6
2.3. Aristotle: words and categories . . . . .	8
2.4. Language and metaphysics in Plato and Aristotle . . . . .	11
2.5. From classical to modern ontology: logic and the “linguistic turn” . . . . .	13
2.6. The rise and fall of logical reconstruction . . . . .	16
2.6.1. Logical form: the quest for clarity and precision . . . . .	16
2.6.2. Frege and Russell: how to make ends meet . . . . .	18
2.6.3. The fragmentation of the logical world picture . . . . .	24
2.7. Logical and linguistic semantics . . . . .	29
3. Meaning and cognition . . . . .	33
3.1. Introduction . . . . .	33
3.2. The “classical” computational approach . . . . .	36
3.3. Language and meaning in the “classical” view . . . . .	41
3.4. Intentionality, mental content and rules . . . . .	46
3.5. Intentionality and information . . . . .	49
3.6. The second cognitive revolution: cognitive linguistics and connectionism . . . . .	52
3.7. Pan-cognitivism: turning behaviourism on its head . . . . .	55
3.8. Continuity and differentiation: a delicate balance . . . . .	59
3.9. Cognition: the differentiation and interrelation of skills	63
3.10. Problems with the word “conceptual” as used in cognitive linguistics . . . . .	68
3.11. Conclusion: conceptual meaning — and why it is not enough . . . . .	75
4. Meaning in a functional perspective . . . . .	79
4.1. Introduction . . . . .	79

4.2. The intellectual history of the functional perspective on language . . . . .	80
4.3. What is “function” (if anything)? . . . . .	88
4.4. Types of functional contexts . . . . .	93
4.5. A functional account of language and meaning . . . . .	96
4.5.1. Millikan and the attempt to found logic on evolution	96
4.5.2. Three functional contexts — and three different discussions . . . . .	98
4.5.3. A functional definition of linguistic meaning . . . .	101
4.5.4. Some central functional characteristics of linguistic meaning . . . . .	105
4.6. Meaning and representation: procedural semantics . . . .	107
4.7. Concepts and conceptual linguistic meaning in the procedural perspective . . . . .	115
4.8. Searle on representation and interaction . . . . .	122
5. Semantics and pragmatics in a functional theory of meaning . .	127
5.1. Introduction . . . . .	127
5.2. Pragmatics, truth, and Plato . . . . .	129
5.3. Coded functions and utterance function . . . . .	132
5.4. The principle of sense . . . . .	136
5.5. Relevance versus sense: translating interaction into information . . . . .	139
5.6. Final remarks . . . . .	146
Part Two: Structure . . . . .	147
1. Introduction . . . . .	149
2. The functional basis of linguistic structure . . . . .	150
2.1. Introduction . . . . .	150
2.2. The ontology of levels . . . . .	150
2.3. Component-based and function-based structure . . . .	154
2.4. Saussurean structuralism: a functional reconstruction . .	157
2.5. Structure and substance — arbitrariness and motivation .	165
2.6. American structuralism: the Bloomfield-Chomsky tradition	170
2.7. Autonomy in generative thinking: the Pygmalion effect revisited . . . . .	173
2.8. Generative autonomy: empty or absurd? . . . . .	176

2.9. Underlying structure I: significant generalizations and the naming fallacy . . . . .	183
2.10. Underlying structure II: distribution vs semantics . . . . .	187
2.11. Autonomy: final remarks . . . . .	190
3. Clause structure in a functional semantics . . . . .	193
3.1. Introduction . . . . .	193
3.2. On content and expression in syntax . . . . .	193
3.3. The nature of content elements . . . . .	200
3.4. Scope and layered clause structure . . . . .	209
3.5. Process and product in syntactic description The clause as recipe for interpretive action . . . . .	214
3.6. The nature of syntax: cognitive and evolutionary perspectives . . . . .	218
3.7. The relation between expression and content syntax . . . .	224
3.8. Differences in relation to standard Functional Grammar .	228
3.9. Semantic clause structure and grammatical universals .	243
4. Conceptual meaning in a functional clause structure . . . . .	255
4.1. Introduction . . . . .	255
4.2. Language structure in Cognitive Grammar . . . . .	255
4.3. Cognitive Grammar and the distinction between clause meaning and interpretation . . . . .	261
4.4. Conceptualization embedded in interaction: the top-down aspect of syntactic structure . . . . .	265
4.5. A closer look at non-conceptual meaning . . . . .	271
4.6. Two forms of incompleteness: functional and conceptual dependence . . . . .	275
4.7. Relations between functional and conceptual aspects of “element” meanings . . . . .	282
4.8. Dependence and the division of labour between coded and uncoded meaning . . . . .	285
4.9. Scope, function and semantic relations: the multidimensionality of semantic structure . . . . .	288
5. Summary: function, structure, and autonomy . . . . .	297

Part Three: Tense . . . . .	311
1. Introduction . . . . .	313
2. The meanings of tenses . . . . .	315
2.1. Some central positions and concepts . . . . .	315
2.2. Individual content elements: the deictic tenses . . . . .	326
2.2.1. Introduction . . . . .	326
2.2.2. Past and present as pointers . . . . .	327
2.2.3. The division of labour between tense and states-of-affairs . . . . .	332
2.2.4. Pointing vs. “focal concern” . . . . .	335
2.2.5. Reference to unidentified past time . . . . .	339
2.2.6. The markedness issue . . . . .	341
2.2.7. The non-temporal past . . . . .	343
2.2.8. A comparison with Cognitive Grammar . . . . .	344
2.2.9. Internal structure . . . . .	347
2.3. The future . . . . .	349
2.3.1. Semantic description . . . . .	349
2.3.2. The prospective . . . . .	351
2.3.3. The pure future in relation to modality . . . . .	352
2.3.4. Future meaning and content syntax . . . . .	355
2.3.5. The status of the past future . . . . .	357
2.3.6. The pure future in cognitive grammar . . . . .	362
2.3.7. The status of the future in the structure of English .	367
2.4. The perfect . . . . .	376
2.4.1. The role of content syntax . . . . .	376
2.4.2. The perfect as a product of grammaticalization .	377
2.4.3. The central meaning of the perfect: the cumulative model of time . . . . .	379
2.4.4. The compositional perfect and the present perfect .	383
2.5. The place of tense meanings in the general theory of semantic clause structure . . . . .	386
3. Tense & Co: time reference in the simple clause . . . . .	391
3.1. Introduction . . . . .	391
3.2. Logical vs. functional operators . . . . .	391
3.3. Time-referential formulae as emerging from meaning plus structure . . . . .	396

3.4. Reference time: a family resemblance concept . . . . .	398
3.5. Tense time, adverbial time and topic time . . . . .	404
3.6. Adverbials in complex tenses . . . . .	414
4. Beyond the simple clause . . . . .	423
4.1. Tense in subclauses: general remarks . . . . .	423
4.2. Indirect speech . . . . .	429
4.2.1. Mental spaces and referential ambiguity . . . . .	429
4.2.2. Point-of-view: coding and pragmatic considerations	433
4.2.3. The past perfect and “back-shift” . . . . .	440
4.3. Tense in conditionals . . . . .	443
4.3.1. Introduction . . . . .	443
4.3.2. The role of if . . . . .	444
4.3.3. Comparison with representational accounts . . . . .	448
4.3.4. The role of tense I: reality-based conditionals . . . . .	451
4.3.5. The role of tense II: P*-based conditionals . . . . .	454
4.3.6. The past perfect conditional: Meaning, usefulness and implicatures . . . . .	459
4.3.7. The “present subjunctive” reading of past tense . .	463
4.4. Functional content syntax and “normal” syntax . . . . .	465
4.5. Tense and discourse . . . . .	475
4.5.1. Introduction . . . . .	475
4.5.2. Discourse Representation Theory . . . . .	477
4.5.3. The “historical” present . . . . .	482
4.5.4. Fleischman’s theory of tense in narratives . . . . .	484
4.5.5. Tense in fiction . . . . .	487
4.5.6. Tense shifting in non-narrative discourse . . . . .	492
5. Conclusion . . . . .	497
5.1. Overview . . . . .	497
5.2. Meaning . . . . .	497
5.3. Structure . . . . .	498
5.4. Survey of times . . . . .	500
5.5. Conceptualization embedded in interaction . . . . .	501
5.6. Semantics and pragmatics . . . . .	502
