

CONTENTS

Acknowledgments	xiii
Introduction	3
Chapter 1: The Bad Argument: One of the Biggest Mistakes in Philosophy in the Past Several Centuries	10
I. A Small Fallacy and a Large Mistake	10
II. Digression About Intentionality and Phenomenology	13
III. Direct Realism	15
IV. Objectivity and Subjectivity	16
V. Diagrams of Visual Perception	17
VI. The Argument for the Rejection of Naïve, Direct Realism	20
VII. The Fallacy in the Argument	24
VIII. Historical Consequences of the Bad Argument	29

Appendix A to Chapter 1: Summary of the Theory of Intentionality	33
1. Content and Object	37
2. Intentional Objects	38
3. Propositional Attitudes	38
4. Propositions as Abstract Entities	39
5. The Ambiguity in "Condition"	41
6. Representation and Presentation	41
7. Observer Independent and Observer Relative Intentionality	42
8. Intentionality Is Part of Our Biology	42
9. Intentional Causation	43
10. Network and Background	44
 Appendix B to Chapter 1: Consciousness	 46
1. The Definition of Consciousness	46
2. Features of Consciousness	47
3. Some Mistaken Accounts of Consciousness in Perception	49
 Chapter 2: The Intentionality of Perceptual Experiences	 52
I. Skepticism about the Intentionality of Perception	54
II. Special Features of Perceptual Intentionality	60
III. Vision and Background: You Have to Learn How to See	70
IV. What Happened to Sense Data?	76
V. The Brain in a Vat	77
VI. Conclusion	79

Chapter 3: Further Developments of the Argument
Against the Bad Argument	80
I. Classical Examples of the Bad Argument	81
II. How the Refutation of the Bad Argument
Against Direct Realism Extends to Other
Versions of the Argument from Illusion	88
III. Consequences of the Bad Argument for the History of Philosophy	94
IV. Conclusion	99
Chapter 4: How Perceptual Intentionality Works, Part One:
Basic Features, Causation, and Intentional Content	100
I. Analytic Philosophy and the Backward Road	101
II. The Boundaries of the Visual	103
III. The Objective and Subjective Perceptual
Fields	105
IV. The Structure of the Subjective Visual Field	110
V. The Hierarchical Structure of Visual
Perception	111
VI. How Do the Phenomenological Features of the Subjective Visual Field Determine the Conditions of Satisfaction of the Visual
Experience?	114
VII. My Current View	118
VIII. The Role of Presentational Intentional
Causation	126
IX. The Primary Qualities	128
X. The Backward Road	130
XI. A Possible Objection	131
XII. Summary of the Results So Far	132

Chapter 5: How Perceptual Intentionality Works, Part Two:
Extending the Analysis to Non-basic Features	135
I. From Bottom to Top of Visual Perception	137
II. Three-Dimensional Perceptions	138
III. Temporal Relations	142
IV. Extending the Analysis Upward	143
V. Recognition and the Problem of Particularity	145
VI. Solution of Some Outstanding Questions
About Perception	150
VII. The Brain in the Vat	155
VIII. Conclusion	161
Chapter 6: Disjunctivism	163
I. What Exactly Is Disjunctivism?	165
II. Arguments in Favor of Disjunctivism and
Replies to Them	172
Objection 1: Commonality Implies the Negation
of Naïve Realism	173
Reply to Objection 1	174
Continuation of Reply to Objection 1: The
Elements of the Perceptual Situation	176
Objection 2: A Disjunctive Argument for
Disjunctivism	180
Reply to Objection 2	181
Objection 3: The Epistemic Argument	183
Reply to Objection 3	184
Objection 4: Perceptual Experience as an
Interface	185
Reply to Objection 4	186
Objection 5: Sense Data	188
Reply to Objection 5	188

Objection 6: Veridical Perception Is Transparent or Diaphanous	188
Reply to Objection 6	189
III. Consciousness and Perception: Campbell's Account	190
IV. The Real Source of the Disagreement	197
V. Disjunctivism and Visual Imagination	198
 Chapter 7: Unconscious Perception	 201
I. A Brief History of the Unconscious	201
II. Suspicions about Consciousness	208
III. Does Consciousness Matter?	213
 Chapter 8: Classical Theories of Perception	 217
Skepticism and the Classical Theories of Perception	217
I. Skepticism	218
II. Phenomenalism, Idealism, and the Representative Theory of Perception	222
III. Refutation of the Representative Theory of Perception	225
IV. Refutation of Phenomenalism	226
V. The Classical Theories and the Philosophical Problem of Perception	231
VI. Primary and Secondary Qualities	232
 Name Index	 237
Subject Index	239