

Contents

Acknowledgments / ix

1 Introduction / 1

 General scope and purpose / 1

 Focus on therapy / 2

 Descriptive approach to each therapy / 3

 Description and integration of differences / 5

 Life-world of the therapist / 6

 Advantages of traditional orientations / 8

 Disadvantages of traditional orientations / 9

 An existential-phenomenological approach / 10

2 Freud's view of the patient / 13

 The neurotic patient / 13

 The active unconscious / 16

 The repetitive unconscious / 18

 Summary / 19

- 3 Classical Freudian therapy / 23
 - Making the unconscious conscious / 23
 - The psychoanalytic procedure / 25
 - Lying down / 25
 - The analyst's invisibility / 26
 - Instruction to free associate / 29
 - The analyst's evenly hovering attention / 31
 - The act of interpretation / 33
 - The problem of resistance / 34
 - Making the reflective act concretely real / 34
 - Resistance in the classic analytic sense / 37
 - Resistance to being a patient / 40
 - The transference experience / 43
 - Characteristic content of the analytic interpretation / 46
 - Influence on the analyst / 48
 - Influence on the patient / 51
 - The outcome of successful analysis / 53
- 4 The case of Mary / 57
 - Introduction to Mary / 57
 - The analytic view / 58
 - Introduction to Dr. R. / 60
 - A happy beginning / 61
 - A less happy beginning / 62
 - A question of fact / 63
 - Analysis with Dr. R. / 64
 - The everyday uses of interpretation / 66
 - The patient's involvement in analysis / 69
 - The structure and enforcement of analytic distance / 72
 - Constituting a new world for living / 78
 - Analysis becomes the patient's story / 83
 - The dream life as dialogue / 85
 - Termination: the twelfth month / 88
- 5 Jung's view of the patient / 91
 - Jung's comprehensive individualizing / 91

- The patient's condition / 94
- Projection and other symptoms of neurosis / 95
- The collective or universal unconscious / 98
- Self-unity as the goal of life / 101
- Jung's theory of complexes / 103
- The ego-self and the real self / 105
- Summary / 106
- 6 The Jungian approach to psychotherapy / 109
 - Toward integration / 109
 - Symbolic soul meeting / 111
 - Recognition of the shadow / 114
 - The principle of compensation / 116
 - Amplification / 117
 - The amplified dream / 120
 - Amplification versus explanation / 124
 - The general activities of the therapist / 127
 - The method of active imagination / 128
 - The use of creative activities / 130
 - The development of the archetypal self / 132
- 7 Mary's case continued / 137
 - Reintroduction / 137
 - The first meeting / 139
 - "In the dark water with a dolphin" / 141
 - Introduction to Dr. M. / 143
 - The dialogue / 144
 - Finding Mary's type / 145
 - Mary's suitability for Jungian therapy / 148
 - The problem of objectivity / 149
 - A dream series / 151
 - The therapist in the dream world / 152
 - The use of artistic production / 154
 - Religious development / 156
 - The assimilation of religion / 158
 - The humane presence of the therapist / 160

- The use of active imagination / 163
- The transformation of Mary's life-world / 166
- 8 Client-centered view of the client / 169
 - Background / 169
 - Fundamental conception of neurotic development / 170
 - The theory of neurosis / 172
 - The theory of values and valuational processes / 173
- 9 Client-centered therapy / 177
 - Background / 177
 - Nondirectiveness / 179
 - Recent modifications / 180
 - The value stance of the therapist / 182
 - The therapist's "objectivity" / 183
 - The general process of therapy / 185
 - Focus on the client / 185
 - The therapist accepts the client / 187
 - The therapist speaks / 189
 - "You really feel" / 189
 - "You really feel" / 191
 - "You really feel" / 192
 - "I" and "you" / 193
 - The therapist speaks for himself / 195
 - The growing organismic-self / 197
 - An alternative vision / 199
 - Therapists and clients vary / 201
 - Results of client-centered therapy / 204
- 10 Mary's case renewed / 209
 - Background / 209
 - Mary enters therapy / 211
 - Introduction to Dr. G. / 213
 - Five interviews / 215
 - Dr. G.'s style of participation / 217

- A different style / 219
- The self-effacement of the therapist / 220
- Development of the sensing-feeling self / 222
- “To be a human body and to be you” / 225
- Client-centered questioning / 229
- Eleven more interviews / 230
- Termination of therapy / 232
- 11 The dialectics of psychotherapy / 235
 - The convincingness of therapy / 235
 - The appeal of the theory / 239
 - Coherence, clarity, control, objectivity / 239
 - Transcendent truth / 240
 - Special paths of life / 242
 - The manner of specialization / 244
 - The source of blindness / 246
 - Effect of therapeutic one-sidedness / 248
 - Common values / 250
 - A more adequate descriptive theory / 251
 - Personal factors / 253
 - Traditional theories / 255
 - Values and truths / 257
 - Orthodox psychoanalysis / 257
 - Jungian psychotherapy / 261
 - Client-centered therapy / 265
 - Toward a descriptive, comprehensive science of therapy / 268