

CONTENTS

List of contributors

PART I Meditation—Western and Eastern perspectives

Introduction to Part I 3

1 Traditional and psychological perspectives on meditation
Michael A. West 5

Historical and transcultural perspectives; Meditation by any other name; Instructions for meditation; Why meditate?; The history of psychological research into meditation; Typologies of meditation; The problems of research on meditation; Summary

2 Meditation in Buddhist psychology Guy Claxton 23

Meditation in context; Buddhist psychology: a constructivist perspective; The nature of concepts; Dependent origination; The construction of a self; The Four Noble Truths; What is meditation?; Meditation and psychotherapy; The effects of meditation; Further research

3 Meditation: contemporary theoretical approaches Michael M. Delmonte 39

Introduction; Information-processing approaches; Meditation and consciousness; Bilateral brain model; Psychoanalytic approaches; Behavioural approaches; Constructivist approaches; Conclusion

PART II Research perspectives

Introduction to Part II 57

4 The phenomenology of meditation Ronald J. Pekala 59

Reliability, validity, and artefact in phenomenological assessment; Single case studies; Studies involving meditation groups only; Meditation versus control groups; Meditation versus control and other groups; Conclusions

5 The influence of meditation versus rest on physiological arousal: a second examination David S. Holmes 81

Conceptual and methodological considerations; Physiological arousal during meditation; Meditation and control of somatic arousal in threatening situations; Concerns, comments, and replies; Overall conclusions and implications; Notes

6 Meditation and the EEG Peter Fenwick 104

Introduction; Early studies in meditation; Expansion of meditation research; Meditation—a right hemisphere experience; Formulation and conclusion

7	Personality and meditation	Michael M. Delmonte	118
	Introduction; Meditation and anxiety; Self-esteem/self-concept; Depression; Psychosomatic symptomatology; Self-actualization; Locus of control; Introversion-extraversion; Conclusions
PART III Meditation as therapy
	Introduction to Part III		135
8	Meditation as psychotherapy: a new look at the evidence	Jonathan C. Smith	136
	The traditional evidence; A skills-focused approach to meditation; The clinical impact of applying meditative skills: predisposing individual variables; Meditative skills and self-relaxation; Clinical meditation research: new questions; The clinical use of meditation; Summary
9	Managing meditation in clinical practice	Patricia Carrington	150
	Clinical conditions responding to meditation; Determining when to use meditation; Limitations of meditation in clinical settings; Representative clinical applications; Precautions; Clinical application; Conclusions
10	Implications of psychotherapy research for the study of meditation	David A. Shapiro	173
	Historical overview of psychotherapy research; Validity issues in studies of psychotherapy and meditation; Change mechanisms in psychotherapy and meditation; Recommendations; Conclusion
PART IV Conclusions
	Introduction to Part IV		191
11	Meditation: magic, myth, and mystery	Michael A. West	192
	A koan ; An overview; Putting practice into theory; An answer to the koan
	References		211
	Author index		239
	Subject index		247