

CONTENTS

Acknowledgements	viii
Introduction	1
1 The Edwardian Theatre	11
Introduction	11
The Edwardian theatre	12
Popular genres	17
New theatrical forms	28
Censorship and the rise of the new theatres	32
Social drama	34
Suffrage drama	45
Regional and repertory theatre	48
Conclusion	55
2 First World War Theatre	59
Introduction	59
Theatre during the war	60
Propaganda and censorship	62
Popular genres	63
Patriotic plays	70
Anti-war plays	75
Theatre and the services	78
Women and war	84
Staging social change	85
Shakespeare and war	88
Conclusion	91
3 Interwar Theatre	95
Introduction	95
Interwar entertainment	97
‘Little’, amateur and regional theatres	98
Experiments in drama	104

Contents

The rise of commercial theatre	111
Dramatising the first world war	117
Shifting social and sexual mores	131
Images of England	141
Conclusion	146
4 Second World War Theatre and After	149
Introduction	149
Wartime conditions	150
Troop entertainment	153
CEMA	158
Touring theatre	161
Community theatre and theatre in education	165
Repertory and regional theatre	167
Popular genres	171
Responses to war	174
The Holocaust and nuclear war	177
Political plays	181
Reinscribing national identity	184
Radio and television	187
Refugee theatre	189
Post-war Britain	191
Post-war theatre	192
Conclusion	197
5 'Producing the Scene': The Evolution of the Director in British Theatre 1900–50 by Claire Cochrane	199
Origins and obstacles	201
The director in the regions	203
Directing women	207
The Oxbridge factor	210
6 'Masculine Women and Effeminate Men': Gender and Sexuality on the Modernist Stage by Penny Farfan	213
7 Staging Hitler, Not Staging Hitler by Steve Nicholson	223
Introduction	223
1933–4	224
1935–7	226
1938–9	228

Conclusion	241
Chronology	247
Notes	261
Bibliography	295
Notes on Contributors	317
Index	319