Contents

List of maps, tables, and graphs page x
Acknowledgments xi
Note on terminology xv
List of abbreviations xvi

Introduction 1
Patterns of power 3
The historiography of early medieval politics 7
The history of the reign as context for the practice of empire 23
Rethinking Charlemagne's political practice 38

Part I Strategic rulership

Part I introduction: tools of control and coercion 43

1 Managing royal agents 47
Charlemagne's justice: double delegation and overlapping office 48
Justice in practice 63
The advantages of overlapping 77

2 Disciplining royal agents 90
The problem of royal agents 90
The management of counts 95
The possibilities of discipline 99
Losing honors or correcting bad behavior? 107
Royal service as ministerium 118

3 Fractured control: Charlemagne's response to dissent 128
The limits of unity: a typology of dissent 128
Opposition to particular policies 131
Rebellion 135
Hrodgaud 136
Hardrad 140

Pippin the Hunchback 149
The lessons of revolt 152
The threat of violence 157

Part I conclusion: control and its limits 165

Part II Center and region in Charlemagne's empire

Part II introduction: unity and diversity in Charlemagne's empire 169

4 An empire of regions? 175
Imperial and local consciousness in the so-called "minor annals" 179
Classifying the annals: a new taxonomy 180
Charlemagne's political world through the lens of the "minor annals" 199
The special roles of Italian bishops 206
Charlemagne's favorite Italian bishop: Paulinus of Aquileia 207
Italian bishops and royal charters 215
Charlemagne's impact on Italian bishops 229

5 The conquered regions as arenas for experimentation 239
Case study 1: regional reform councils in Bavaria 243
Case study 2: community-based testimony and royal power 259
Case study 3: learning to use capitularies 278
Experimentation as a pattern of rulership 289

6 The nature of the empire: centralization and communication 293
The imperial system in action: a case study of communication 294
The limits of standardization 298
Literate administration 303
The quest for information 305
Literacy and governance 311
Networks of communication 317
Royal palaces 322
The status of Aachen as a capital 322
Aachen as a model palace? 325
Aachen as political center 333

Part II conclusion: the imperial character of Charlemagne's realm 337

Part III An empire of practice

Part III introduction: continuity, change, and the building of an empire 343

7 The chronology of the reign 347
Ganshof's periodization of the reign 347
Rex et imperator: rethinking chronology 350
Governance at the end of the reign: Charlemagne in 813 364
The death of Charlemagne 377

8 Recta via: the dynamics of political change 379
The making of Charles the Great: Charlemagne and his brother 381
The consistency of royal goals 396
Salvation 397
Royal dominance 399
Community 401
Restructuring power networks 402
Forces for change: the press of events, contingency, and failure 403
Did Charlemagne have a plan? 423

Part III conclusion: an empire of practice 429

Conclusion: Charlemagne's invention of medieval rulership 431
Charlemagne's rulership 431
Europae pater: the legacy of Charlemagne 433

Bibliography 437
Index 522