

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Preface	vii
Acknowledgments	xxi
PART ONE: THE PUBLIC MODE
I. The Public Mode	3
i. Public Voices	4
ii. Life as Art, Art as Nature	16
iii. The Reordering of the Genres	40
PART TWO: THE TRIUMPH OF NARRATIVE
II. The Search for New Language and Form: Narrative Poetry from More to Chamberlayne	53
i. Beginnings in More and Kynaston	57
ii. Narrative Experiment: Quarles, Davenant, and Cowley	65
iii. Love in Fantastic Triumph: Pharonnida	96
III. Three Languages	129
IV. Butler: Hating Our Physician	158
V. Milton's Laws Divine and Human	198
i. Our Prospect is Enlarged	200
ii. Heroic Celebration of One's Countrymen	206
iii. Parnassus and Sinai	220
iv. Making Whole	252
v. Recovered Paradise	268
vi. Trusting Milton and Ourselves	282
VI. Dryden's Heroic Idea	288
i. The Great Idea	289
ii. Configuring the Whole	316
iii. The Higher Mimesis	343

CONTENTS

PART THREE: COLORS OF GOOD AND EVIL

VII. The Sons of Belial	367
VIII. A Fruitful Age for Satire	387
i. The Right Vein of English Satire	388
ii. Humanity's Our Worst Disease	407
iii. The Harsh Cadence of Rugged Lines	423
iv. A Talent for Satire	432
IX. Our Honour, Virtue, and Chief Praise	459
i. Voices and Actions	459
ii. The Return of Justice in Hudibras	465
iii. Milton's Empire of the Self	479
iv. To Create Afresh the Inward Man	498
v. Dryden's Esteem of Merit, Man, and Love	508
vi. Last Perspectives on the Human Comedy	541
Appendix: Two Summaries of William Chamberlayne's Pharonnida	559
Major Editions Used and Consulted	569
Index	575