

Contents

|  |      |
|--|------|
| Acknowledgements  | viii |
| Series Preface  | ix   |
| List of Contributors  | x    |
| Chronology  | xii  |
| Introduction Gary Day  | 1    |
| Some theoretical considerations  | 1    |
| The economy  | 5    |
| Social policy  | 10   |
| Culture, criticism and consumerism   | 15   |
| Conclusion   | 22   |
| 1. 'Not The Sweet Home That It Looks': British Poetry, 1930–55 Jessica Maynard | 28   |
| Landscapes   | 31   |
| Ruin and renewal   | 33   |
| Islands  | 35   |
| Social surgery   | 39   |
| Alternative visions  | 42   |
| 2. Decline and Fall? The Course of the Novel  |      |
| Maggie Clune, Gary Day, Chris Maguire   | 50   |
| Reality and morality: crisis and the 1930s novel   | 52   |
| A woman's place: a feminist perspective  | 57   |
| An uneasy alliance: war and the novel  | 61   |
| A brave new world? The postwar novel   | 64   |
| 3. Popular Fiction 1930–55 Michael Hayes                                       | 70   |
| The sacred and the profane   | 70   |
| Economics  | 70   |

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Fictions   | 74  |
| Readers  | 79  |
| Case study: the spy thriller: Eric Ambler, The Dark Frontier                        | 82  |
| 4. In Minor Key: Theatre 1930–55 Michael Woolf                               | 86  |
| Conditions of change   | 86  |
| Theatre in time  | 89  |
| The major theatrical experiences: An Inspector Calls and The Winslow Boy     | 95  |
| Crisis, nostalgia and the poets: Murder in the Cathedral and Under Milk Wood | 101 |
| Conclusion   | 104 |
| 5. British Newspapers 1930–55 Nicholas Rance                                 | 107 |
| Introduction   | 107 |
| From Lyons to lion: the Rector of Stiffkey   | 113 |
| ‘Bogey-man’: the general election of 1945  | 118 |
| ‘Several youths in Edwardian clothes were taken to the police station’                     | 122 |
| Conclusion   | 128 |
| 6. Radio in Peace and War Robert Giddings                                    | 132 |
| The mission  | 132 |
| Music  | 135 |
| The spoken word  | 140 |
| Drama  | 146 |
| Reith and religion   | 150 |
| Ringing the changes  | 152 |
| Conclusion   | 157 |
| 7. British Cinema: Class, Culture and Consensus, 1930–55 Lez Cooke           | 163 |
| The 1930s  | 165 |
| Britain at war   | 175 |
| Postwar austerity  | 183 |
| 8. Going Modern and Being British: Art in Britain 1930–55 David Masters      | 191 |
| Into the 1930s: going abstract   | 191 |
| Unit One: ‘a truly contemporary spirit’  | 193 |
| Sculpture in the 1930s: truth to materials   | 195 |
| Art, politics and ‘Modernismus’  | 198 |
| The 1930s and 1940s: a return to the object  | 203 |

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Postwar art: the way forward                         | 207 |
| 1951: 'A tonic for the nation'                       | 208 |
| Into the 1950s: 'The Englishness of English Art'     | 210 |
| 9. Popular Music in Britain 1930–55           |     |
| Robert Bleil, Peter Driver, Benedict Sarnaker | 216 |
| Regional culture                                     | 216 |
| London and Broadway                                  | 218 |
| The influence of the cinema                          | 219 |
| Dance bands in London                                | 220 |
| Dance  | 221 |
| Wartime influences                                   | 224 |
| Postwar American influences                          | 226 |
| Radio and record markets                             | 228 |
| Towards a youth culture                              | 229 |
| 10. Technology 1930–55 John Morris     | 231 |
| The Scene in the 1930s                               | 231 |
| The shadow of war                                    | 236 |
| Postwar issues and developments                      | 241 |
| 'Having it so good'                                  | 244 |
| Index   | 251 |