

Contents

Acknowledgements	vii
Introduction	1
1 "The Devil's Own Tattoo": Prefiguring Imperial Sovereignty in Exploration Narratives	10
Sovereign marks	19
Sovereign mercy	36
Sovereign medicine	41
Concluding remarks	45
2 "A Pulpy Mass of Churned-Up Flesh": Exploring the Complexity of Pulverization	47
The causes and conduct of the Emin Pasha Relief Expedition	48
Mutilation and pulverization in public discourse about the Expedition	52
Travel is dead, long live Empire	59
3 Damaged Bodies and Imperial Ideology in the Travel Fiction of Haggard, Schreiner, and Conrad	67
Blood, guts, and glory: Rider Haggard and anachronistic violence	70
"The noblest attributes of an imperial rule": Schreiner and victimhood in Southern Africa	75
Restraining the "Unlawful Soul" in Heart of Darkness	95
4 Blurring Boundaries, Forming a Discipline: Violence and Anthropological Collecting	112
The case of the overzealous zoologist	114
Of skulls and skeletons	116
Science and suffering on the Emin Pasha Relief Expedition	123
Bodies and cultural anthropology	134
Concluding remarks	144

5 “Tongues Cocked and Loaded”: Women Travel Writers and Verbal Violence	147
Amelia Edwards: Appropriating Arabic maledictions	150
Cornelia Speedy: Winning wordy tussles	154
Mary Kingsley: Wide-ranging linguistic mastery	158
Marginalization, empowerment, and the written word	170
Epilogue	172
Notes	174
Works cited	200
Primary sources	200
Secondary sources	204