

Contents

1	The Basics of Catchment Hydrology	1
1.1	About Water Catchments and Stream Networks	1
1.2	Topographic Analysis and Catchment Boundaries	2
1.2.1	Catchment Flow Vectors and Streamlines	3
1.2.2	Defining Catchment Boundaries for a Specific Stream Cross-Section	8
1.3	Stream Networks	10
1.4	Hydrologic Units and Catchment Arithmetic	13
1.5	Introduction to Hydrographs and Averaging of Units	15
1.5.1	Runoff Expressed in Depth Units	17
1.5.2	The Instantaneous Hydrograph	17
1.6	How Does Forest Hydrology Differ from Hydrology?	19
1.7	What's Different About Australian Forest Hydrology?	20
	References	21
2	Hydrologic Measurements and the Water Balance	23
2.1	Introduction	23
2.2	Basics of Measurement on a Catchment	24
2.2.1	Rainfall and Hyetograph Measurement	24
2.2.2	Hydrograph Measurement	28
2.2.3	Measurements of Slope Water Storage	30
2.2.4	Measurement of Plant Water Use	32
2.3	Analysis of Streamflow Hydrographs	32
2.3.1	Flow Separation Analysis	34
2.4	Using Field Data to Form a Water Balance	39
2.5	Using "Zhang Curves" to Estimate Water Balance	40
2.5.1	Percentage Runoff and Rainfall Elasticity Using Zhang Curves	43
	Conclusions	44
	References	44

3	The Fundamental Building Blocks –First Order Catchments	47
3.1	Introduction	47
3.2	The Dominance of “Headwater Streams”	48
3.3	The Prototypical First Order Catchment, and Streams	49
3.4	Groundwater Outflow vs. Downslope Soil Movement	49
3.5	Colluvium and Bedrock Erosion	51
3.6	Moving Upstream – Can We Define Zero Order Streams?	55
3.6.1	Ephemerality of Low Order Streams	55
3.7	Beds and Streams	56
3.8	Hydrologic Characteristics of Forested Catchment Soils	57
3.9	Continuum Levels	58
3.10	Characteristic Outflow Behaviour of Catchment Elements	59
3.11	Similitude and Scaling of Catchment Processes	61
	References	62
4	Dynamics of Catchment and Slope Processes	65
4.1	The Role of Science and Maths in Slope Dynamics	65
4.2	Overview of Dynamics of Slope Processes	67
4.3	The Stream Channel as a Connecting Link	68
4.4	Overland Flow and Slope Infiltration	71
4.4.1	Measuring Infiltration	73
4.5	Saturated (Groundwater) and Unsaturated Flow	75
4.5.1	Applications of Groundwater Theory to Model Forest Slopes	78
4.5.2	“Perched” Groundwater and “Deep” Groundwater	79
4.5.3	Does a “Wave” of Groundwater Recharge Occur?	80
4.6	Slope Evaporation	80
4.7	Hewlett’s Variable Source Area Concept of Stream Runoff	82
4.8	Use of Hydrographs to Examine Dynamic Processes	85
	Conclusion	85
	References	85
5	Field Measurement of Water Use of Forests	89
5.1	Why Study This?	89
5.2	Paired Catchment Experiments	90
5.2.1	What Is a Paired Catchment Project?	90
5.2.2	An Example of a Paired Catchment Project: Croppers Creek	92
5.2.3	Traditional Approach to Paired Catchment Calibration and Analysis	95
5.2.4	A Modern Example of Paired Catchment Statistical Treatment	99

5.2.5	What Time Units to Use?	103
5.2.6	How Long Does Calibration Need to Be?	104
5.2.7	Where Do Paired Catchments Sit in the World of Experiments?	105
5.2.8	Paired Catchment Projects in Australia	107
5.3	Single Catchment Studies of Water Use	109
5.4	Plot Measurements of Water Balance	109
5.4.1	Case Study: Rachel Nolan and Impact of Fires	110
5.4.2	Advantages and Disadvantages of Plot Hydrology Work	111
5.4.3	Where Do Plots Sit in the World of Experiments?	111
5.4.4	“Closing the Water Balance” on Plots	112
5.5	The Scaling Issue	112
5.5.1	Spreadsheet Approach of Weighted Assessment	112
5.5.2	Modelling Approach to Scaling	113
5.5.3	Scaling Up Controversies	114
	In Conclusion	115
	References	115
6	Impacts of Native Forest Management on Catchment Hydrology	117
6.1	Introduction	117
6.1.1	Sources of Information and the Role of Science	117
6.2	Fog Drip and Interception by Native Forests	119
6.2.1	Fog Drip	119
6.2.2	Canopy Interception	120
6.3	Basic Runoff Curves for Native Eucalypt Forest	122
6.4	Mountain Ash Water Use and Runoff Curves	124
6.4.1	Quantifying the Yield Decline: “Kuczera Curves”	128
6.4.2	Response to Logging	131
6.4.3	Other Melbourne Water Paired Catchment Logging Experiments	133
6.4.4	Later Work on Mountain Ash Age-Yield Relationships	134
6.5	An “Age-Yield” Response for Non-ash Eucalypts?	136
6.5.1	Yambulla Paired Catchment and Plot Studies	138
6.5.2	Karuah Paired Catchment Project	138
6.5.3	Tantawangalo Paired Catchment Project	138
6.5.4	Western Australian Work on Jarrah	139
6.5.5	Political Aspects of Native Forest Water Use	139

6.6	Thinning of Native Forests for Water Production	140
6.6.1	Thinning of Mountain Ash Forests	141
6.6.2	Thinning of Mountain Forest at Tantawangalo	144
6.6.3	Thinning of Jarrah	145
	Conclusions	145
	References	146
7	Hydrology of Man-Made Forests (Plantations)	149
7.1	Introduction	149
7.1.1	What Is Different About Plantations?	150
7.1.2	Are All Plantations the Same?	150
7.1.3	Defining the “Water Use” of a Plantation	151
7.2	Runoff Curve Approaches to Plantation Water Use	151
7.2.1	“Zhang Curves”	151
7.2.2	“Holmes and Sinclair” Relationships	152
7.2.3	Nanni Curves	153
7.3	Water Use of Radiata Pine on Well-Drained Sites	154
7.3.1	Absolute Water Use	154
7.3.2	Relative Change in Water Use	158
7.4	Water Use of Eucalyptus Plantations	159
7.5	Water Use When Plantations Can Tap Groundwater	160
7.6	Other Australian Plantation Species	161
7.7	Plantation Water Issues Around the World	161
7.7.1	Eucalyptus Plantations	161
7.8	Balancing the Hydrologic Benefits of Plantations	163
	References	163
8	Impacts of Burning on Catchment Hydrology and Management	165
8.1	Introduction	165
8.2	Burning of the Croppers Creek Hydrologic Project in 2006	166
8.2.1	The Dreaded “Spike Hydrograph” and Other Burning Effects	168
8.3	What Happens to Hydrology When a Catchment Is Burnt	172
8.3.1	Soil Heating and “Brick” Formation	173
8.3.2	Water Repellency and Soil Infiltration	174
8.3.3	Runoff from Water Repellent Catchments	175
8.3.4	Erosion from Burnt Catchments	176
8.3.5	Water Quality Impacts from Burnt Catchments	179
8.3.6	The “Reseeder” Versus “Resprouter” Dichotomy	181
8.3.7	Twice- Burnt Areas	183
8.3.8	The Burnt Areas Becomes Hotter!	184
8.4	Post-fire Hydrologic Rehabilitation	184
8.5	Case Study 2: The Macalister River Floods of 2007	185

8.6	Future Fire Hydrology Research in Australia	187
	Conclusions	188
	References	188
9	Water Quality and Nutrient Issues for Small Catchments	191
9.1	Why Measure Water Quality?	191
9.2	Planning a Water Quality “Campaign”	193
9.2.1	The Pure Water of Mountain Streams Makes Measurement Difficult!	194
9.2.2	What Parameter Should I Measure?	195
9.2.3	Water Sampling and Statistical Sampling Issues	196
9.2.4	Technology to the Rescue?	199
9.2.5	Water Quality Computations	201
9.2.6	Water Quality Snapshots	203
9.3	Case Study 1: The Croppers Creek Water Quality Study	206
9.3.1	Effects of Clearing and Planting with Radiata Pine	207
9.3.2	Effects of Fertilizers	207
9.3.3	Effects of Herbicides	208
9.3.4	Long Term Effects on Water Quality	209
9.3.5	Use of Biota as a Measure of Water Quality	209
9.3.6	Did the Cropper Project Provide the Information Required?	210
9.4	Case Study 2: Water Quality Effects of Forest Roads	211
9.5	Protection of Water Quality in Forestry Management	211
9.6	The Future of Forest Water Quality Studies	212
	References	213
10	Flooding Forests	215
10.1	Introduction	215
10.1.1	What Is Meant by “Flooding Forests?”	216
10.1.2	The Distinction Between Riparian Forests and Flooding Forests	217
10.1.3	Ecological Adaptation for Survival During Flooding	218
10.1.4	The Forest as a Hydrologic Refugium	218
10.1.5	Australian and International Examples of Flooding Forests	219
10.1.6	Threats to Flooding Forests	221
10.2	Case Study 1: River Red Gum Forests of the River Murray	222
10.3	Case Study 2: Swamp Cypress Forests of the Atchafalaya Basin	223
10.4	Quantification of the Flooding Regime	224
10.4.1	Sources of Flood Water	224
10.4.2	Annual Flood Frequency and Annual Flood Duration	225

10.4.3	Flood Seasonality	226
10.4.4	Methods for Quantification	228
10.4.5	Chaotic Hydrologic Systems	231
10.5	Negotiations with River Managers on Forest Issues	232
	References	233
11	Catchment Management Issues World-Wide	235
11.1	Issues, Issues Galore in Catchment Management	235
11.2	The Basic Water Supply Catchment	236
11.3	World's Best Practice in Catchment Management	237
11.4	The Public and Attitudes on Catchment Management	238
11.4.1	Sydney's Giardia Crisis	239
11.5	"Open" or "Closed" Catchments?	240
11.5.1	What Is a "Closed Catchment?"	240
11.5.2	Advantages and Disadvantages of Closed Catchments	241
11.6	How Much Catchment Do We Need to Supply a City?	243
11.7	The Concept of Payment for Catchment Services	246
11.8	Economics of Forested Catchment Issues	248
11.8.1	Without Water, There Is No Economy!	248
11.8.2	Long Time Periods Bedevil Compound Interest	249
11.8.3	Valuation of Water and Other Products	250
11.8.4	Managing for Catchment Resilience	250
11.9	Dealing with Disasters to the Catchment's Forests	251
11.10	Catchment Protection Issues	252
11.10.1	Road Drainage Management	252
11.10.2	Buffer Strips and Stream Protection	253
11.11	Two Case Studies of Catchment Management	257
11.11.1	City of Ballarat (Australia)	257
11.11.2	Quabbin Reservoir – United States of America	258
11.12	And Finally	260
	References	260
	Appendix 1: Map of Australia Showing Locations Mentioned in the Text	263
	Index	265