

Contents

Acknowledgements	ix
Introduction: Affect and Jewish Feeling	1
What is affect?	5
What is Midrash?	17
Midrash and affect	24
1 'The still undercurrent of deep feeling': History and Nation for Grace Aguilar	37
'More than unusually moved': Representing women's reading	41
'The full gushing tide of rapture': Theorizing women's reading	58
'The Bible, and that nation whose earliest history it so vividly records': Jewish histories for England's Jews	68
2 'Finer and finer discrimination': George Eliot's Feeling for the Jews	85
'Various combinations of common likeness': Fellow feeling and the ethics of form	89
'Absorbing enthusiasm': Education and identity	101
'A people with oriental sunlight in their blood': Jewish nationalism	107
3 'A fragment of the eternal truth': Futurity and Race for Amy Levy	115
'That elaborate misconception': Debating Deronda with George Eliot and Henry James	119

‘Startling with excess of truth’: Futurity and poetic unfitness	128
‘A strange yearning affection’: The racial romance of Amy Levy’s Reuben Sachs	140
Conclusion: Esther and Judith in London:     Jewish Feeling as a New Category of Affect	165
Bibliography	181
Index	195