

Contents

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS	ix
INTRODUCTION	1
CHAPTER 1
“A little personal attention”: Storytelling and the Black Audience in Charles W. Chesnutt’s The Conjure Woman	9
CHAPTER 2
“Ah don’t mean to bother wid tellin’ ‘em nothin’”: Zora Neale Hurston’s Critique of the Storytelling Aesthetic in Their Eyes Were Watching God	29
CHAPTER 3
Listening to the Blues: Ralph Ellison’s Trueblood Episode in Invisible Man	47
CHAPTER 4
The Best “Possible Returns”: Storytelling and Gender Relations in James Alan McPherson’s “The Story of a Scar”	61

CHAPTER 5
From Within the Frame: Narrative Negotiations with the Black Aesthetic in Toni Cade Bambara's "My Man Bovanne"	77
CHAPTER 6
"Would she have believed any of it?": Interrogating the Storytelling Motive in John Edgar Wideman's "Doc's Story"	93
NOTES	109
BIBLIOGRAPHY	133
INDEX	143