

CONTENTS

- CHAPTER ONE Dame Agatha Christie is buried in St. Mary's Churchyard, Cholsey . . . Agatha Christie translated into one hundred and three languages, fourteen more than Shakespeare . . . she becomes the master of puzzle writing . . . bored by fools and trivia . . . the timelessness of Christie plots . . . her fanatic craving for privacy . . . Christie's attempts to smoke and drink fail completely . . . her delight in royal rewards. 1
- CHAPTER TWO The mystery of Agatha Christie's mother . . . American father . . . childhood in Torquay . . . educated at home . . . the death of her father . . . the influence of the novelist Eden Phillpotts . . . cream tea at the Army and Navy store . . . finishing school in Paris . . . hopes of becoming a concert singer dashed . . . Agatha Miller joins the young social set of Torquay . . . her first poems are published. 12
- CHAPTER THREE The elegant ambiance of Torquay in the early 1900s . . . bathing and family picnics . . . Mrs. Miller's influence over her daughter . . . Mr. Miller's death. 29
- CHAPTER FOUR Agatha Miller meets the dashing Archibald Christie . . . love at first sight . . . the engagement ends with a surprise marriage on Christmas Eve . . . becoming a dispenser at Torbay Hospital . . . Christie goes to war . . . sister Madge dares Agatha Christie to write a detective story . . . The Mysterious Affair at Styles written in three weeks . . . The Bodley Head becomes her first publisher . . . the birth of Rosalind . . . Christie returns an R.F.C. hero . . . the family moves to Sunningdale.

38

CHAPTER FIVE Lord Mountbattan gives Agatha Christie the plot for The Murder of Roger Ackroyd . . . a sensation in the detection writing world . . . did she cheat and break the rules or not? . . . Roger Ackroyd becomes a classic and establishes Agatha Christie as a world-known writer.

52

CHAPTER SIX Agatha Christie's despair on the death of her mother . . . her writing dries up . . . Colonel Christie's unfaithfulness . . . life becomes agony . . . the mysterious disappearance of Agatha Christie . . . fifteen thousand fans join police from four counties . . . Colonel Christie under suspicion.

59

CHAPTER SEVEN The search for Mrs. Christie turns to Harrogate . . . Bob Tappin tips off the police . . . Agatha Christie does the Charleston . . . Christie identifies missing wife . . . Mrs. Christie officially declared suffering from loss of memory . . . the discovery of the fourth letter Agatha Christie left behind.

70

CHAPTER EIGHT Agatha Christie recuperates at Cheadle . . . questions asked about cost of search in the House of Commons . . . Christie's gift to the men in the band . . . Agatha Christie granted a divorce . . . trip to Baghdad . . . meeting with Max Mallowan . . . romance enters her life again on the Orient Express . . . marriage to Mallowan . . . a summer of happiness at Ashfield . . . the buying of Greenway which was to become her favorite home . . . she enters a productive period in her writing . . . "1930 is a marvelous year."

86

CHAPTER NINE Agatha Christie joins the Detection Club . . . Dorothy L. Sayers' apathy to Agatha Christie . . . voted president of the Detection Club . . . Chesterton's robes are a good fit . . . Agatha Christie's fascination for Edgar Wallace.

102

CHAPTER TEN The outbreak of war . . . Professor Mallowan joins the R.A.F. . . . moving to a small flat in Lawn Road . . . dispensing at University College Hospital . . . Ten Little Niggers is turned into a play . . .
she writes Absent in the Spring (Collins) under the name of Mary Westmacott . . . Agatha Christie writes Come, Tell Me How You Live (Collins), a memoir of days digging with her husband.

111

CHAPTER ELEVEN Agatha Christie's fascination for the theater . . . the adaptation of several of her books into successful plays . . . Charles Laughton as Poirot . . .
Agatha Christie meets Peter Saunders.

120

CHAPTER TWELVE The Mousetrap written for Queen Mary's eightieth birthday . . . the radio play converted into a full-length play . . . Richard Attenborough signs for the role of Detective Sergeant Trotter . . . Peter Cotes transforms The Mousetrap into a theatrical success . . . Saunders and Cotes cross swords . . . Agatha Christie gives the copyright of The Mousetrap to her schoolboy grandson, Mathew Prichard.

128

CHAPTER THIRTEEN The Mousetrap reaches its thousandth performance . . . Agatha Christie nearly misses The Mousetrap party . . . The Mousetrap makes theatrical history.

142

CHAPTER FOURTEEN The golden fifties of Christie plays
. . . success of Witness for the Prosecution . . . Witness moves to Broadway . . . New York Drama Critics Circle choose Witness as best foreign play . . . a play is written specially for Margaret Lockwood . . . Verdict is booed by the gallery . . . Agatha Christie retaliates by writing another winner within a month.

150

CHAPTER FIFTEEN Agatha Christie is tempted into films
. . . Germany makes the first Christie film . . . her anger and dislike of these early efforts . . . her approval of Billy Wilder's direction of Witness . . . Marlene Dietrich joins Laughton in the film version of Witness . . . Agatha Christie's vocal disapproval of Margaret Rutherford as Miss Marple . . . Miss Rutherford's contempt for crime and violence . . . M-G-M makes four Miss Marple films . . . Rutherford and Christie face to face . . . once more Lord Mountbatten enters Agatha Christie's life . . . Lord Brabourne persuades Agatha Christie to allow him to make a film of Murder on the Orient Express . . . Albert Finney chosen as Poirot . . . the storehouse of Christie novels waiting to be turned into films.

164

CHAPTER SIXTEEN Agatha Christie enters the world of paperbacks . . . as she joins Penguin, sales soar . . . Sir Robert Mark discusses Christie police technique . . . three men from The Times . . . Geri Courtney of Chicago becomes infatuated with the world of Agatha Christie.

177

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN Agatha Christie's work style . . . Professor Frank Behr of Sweden analyzes Christie language . . . a woman of simple, uncomplicated charm . . . dreams up ideas lying in the bath eating apples . . . cucumber sandwiches and Earl Grey tea with Sir Max Mallowan . . . the world of Agatha Christie at Winterbrook House . . . a "Christie for Christmas" . . . "I am frightened by young people being involved with crime."

189

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN The mystery of the Christie fortune . . . the richest writer England has ever produced" . . . family secrecy shrouds financial figures . . . Dame Agatha's intriguing will . . . Christie titles sold to Booker McConnell, Ltd. . . . Dame Agatha's personal business acumen.

202

CHAPTER NINETEEN Christie money saves the Harrison Homes . . . private charities for young and old . . . yearly visits to the pantomime at the Sinodun plays in Wallingford . . . Galmpton School's annual Mallowan

Literary Prize . . . raspberry tea at Greenway . . . a bowl of water lilies at the flower show . . . Agatha Christie's gardener yearly wins all the vegetable prizes at the Brixham Flower Show.	213
CHAPTER TWENTY Dame Agatha as a hostess . . . she tells Dorothy Sayers how tired she is of Poirot . . . walking on a fractured hip . . . Sir William Collins coaxes Dame Agatha to release the manuscript of Curtain written thirty years before . . . Miss Marple's last case . . . the family Christmas party at Winterbrook House . . . Dame Agatha dies peacefully . . . London's theaterland pays its tribute to Dame Agatha Christie . . . requiem of a most astonishing woman.	222
APPENDIX	229
INDEX	233