

CONTENTS

Preface	ix
Abbreviations	xi
Introduction
The need for source analysis	1
Alexander's last days as an example	4
The King's Journal	5
1 The sources of Diodorus Siculus 17.1–63 and 87–88
The method	12
Some passages attributable to Source 1	13
The identification of Source 1	25
Source 2 in some early chapters (2.1 – 8.1 and 15–16)	28
The identification of Source 2	32
The attribution of the other chapters	35
The personal contribution of Diodorus	46
Summary of attributions	49
2 The sources of Diodorus Siculus 17.64–86 and 17.89–118
Consideration of 17.64–86	52
Consideration of 17.89–104	62
Consideration of 17.104–118	68
Summary of attributions	79
Some general conclusions	79
3 The sources of Justin's account of Alexander (9.5.8 – 13.1)
Introduction	86
Consideration of Justin 9.5.8 – 10	87
Consideration of Justin 11	94

Consideration of Justin 12–13.1	101
Attributions and general conclusions	113
4 The sources of Curtius 3–6
Resemblances in Diodorus and Curtius 3–4	116
Comparison between Justin and Curtius 3–4	120
Some comparisons between Curtius and Arrian	123
Summary of attributions for Curtius 3–4	128
Sources in parts of Curtius 5–6	129
Summary of attributions for Curtius 5–6	137
5 The sources of Curtius 7–10
Sources in parts of Curtius 7–8	138
Summary of attributions for Curtius 7–8	151
Sources in parts of Curtius 9–10	151
Summary of attributions for parts of Curtius 9–10	159
6 Some general conclusions
The methods of working of Diodorus, Justin (Trogus) and Curtius	160
Some consequences for the modern historian	166
Notes	170
Bibliography	197
Index	200