

Contents

List of figures	page vii
Acknowledgements	ix
Note on texts and language	x
Introduction	1

Part I ‘Complicated monsters head and tail’: A primer in Spenser, monsters and teratology

1 The Faerie Queene – A poem of monsters?	9
2 The monstrous in the early modern period	14
3 Historical perspectives on the monstrous	17
4 How to read monsters: A survey of Spenser criticism and teratology	28

Part II Reading the monster: Taxonomy

5 Taxonomic considerations	41
6 Monstrous animals (1): Dragons	47
7 Monstrous animals (2): Four-footed beasts	68
8 Human–animal composites	86
9 Giants	98
10 Monstrous humans	123
11 Automata	171
12 Taxonomy reconsidered	188

Part III Making monsters: The monstrous imagination and the poet’s autonomy in The Faerie Queene

13 The problem of the literary monster in the discourse of the poetic imagination	199
14 The monstrous and the literary heterocosm	216

15	In Phantastes's chamber	237
16	Animating the monstrous imagination in The Faerie Queene	253
17	Poetic creation: Spenser as Prometheus	274
18	The poet's autonomy and the use of the monstrous imagination	289
19	Interpreting the monstrous	303

Part IV Conclusions 315

Bibliography	321
Index	355