CONTENTS

Contents i

Preface iii

Introduction 1

I. The ideology of labour under the Principate 21
The Stoa: their general doctrine 21
Stoics on labour: the sources 26
The Stoic conception of ponos 28
Some introductory remarks 28
Stoics and ponos 31
Agriculture 38
Banausic arts 49
Trade 63

II. Technical arts in ancient classifications of knowledge 73
Introduction 73
The terminology: artes mechanicae, mēchanē, mēchanikē technē . 77
Mentality and the technical arts 81
Technical arts as banausic or illiberal arts 90
Technical arts as liberal or semi-liberal arts 94
Technical arts as productive arts 101
Technical arts as a branch of mathematics 107

III. Work and the monastic world 113
Introduction 113
Eastern monasticism 116
The anchorites 116
Pachomius 124
Western monasticism 128
Emergence and early development 128
Work in pre-Benedictine monasticism 137
Jerome 137
Basil 138

Augustine 142
Cassian 146
Work in some early monastic rules 148
The Rule of Benedict and the work ethic in Western monasticism 152

IV. The mechanical arts in medieval classifications of knowledge 159
Some general remarks about medieval classifications of knowledge and the mechanical arts 159
Hugh of St. Victor and the artes mechanicae 162
Some classifications of knowledge dating from the late twelfth and thirteenth centuries 177
Dominic Gundisalvo 178
Vincent of Beauvais 185
Robert Kilwardby 192

V. Ad status sermons and the recognition of work and occupations in the thirteenth century 201
Changes in sermons and confessions during the thirteenth century . 204
Sermones ad status: the genre 208
Sermones ad status: an analysis 213
Hierarchical thinking: tradition or innovation? 214
Material and Immaterial 224
The good worker and the bad 233

Conclusion 245

Bibliography 257

Index 283