

Contents

Acknowledgements	vii
Introduction: The Scope and Aim	1
1 The Historical Dimension of Economic Backwardness	7
Culture and economics	11
Dependence, subaltern groups and the world economy	13
The question of continuity in history	15
2 Beyond Asiatic Despotism: Territorial Power and State Construction in Eurasia	17
Military, mercenary and peasant	22
War and economic dynamics	24
War and technological innovation	26
Frontiers, territories and nomadic empires	29
3 The Power of the Steppe: The Mongol Heritage and the Expansion of Muscovy	35
Steppe dynamics: The warrior states	36
Military organization	39
Administration, finances and the army	43
Provisions in kind and wheat markets	46
Mobilization and colonization: The frontier as a social and political experiment	50
Military service and social order	52
The power of the steppe	57
4 Slavery and Trade in Central Asia and Russia	61
Introduction	61
Kholopy : Slaves, serfs, or indentured servants?	65
War captives at a crossroads of empires	73
Slavery in Central Eurasia: Its estimation and overall interpretation	86

5	Neither Feudalism nor Capitalism: Agrarian Markets under Coercion	91
	The institutions of Russian serfdom	91
	Labour on Russian estates	94
	Proto-industry, trade and growth under serfdom	95
	Towards a reassessment of second serfdom in Eastern Europe	101
6	Beyond Economic Backwardness: Labour and Growth in Eurasia in the Long Nineteenth Century	107
	Growth and labour in Europe and Asia	111
	Conclusion: Russia in a Globalizing World	117
	Notes	124
	References	157
	Index	179