Preface	IX
Chapter 1: Introduction. The temporal and interactional nature of grammar	1
1.1 Close looking at the world: The focus of this study	1
1.2 The linguists' grammar, the speakers' grammar	4
1.2.1 Grammar-in-interaction	4
1.2.2 Grammatical categories and speakers' language use	6
1.2.3 Grammar as a resource for interaction	9
1.2.4 Grammar as inscribed in the temporal unfolding of talk	11
1.2.5 Implications	13
1.3 The present study	14
1.3.1 Purpose of the study	14
1.3.2 Data and procedure	15
1.3.3 A note on French	18
1.3.4 Outline of this book	19
Chapter 2: State of the art	21
2.1 Pathways through a maze: Terminology and categorization	21
2.1.1 A note on terminology	22
2.1.2 A note on categorization: The online properties of constructions	25
2.1.3 A note on topic	26
2.2 Left- and right-dislocation	28
2.2.1 Definition and grammatical properties of LD and RD	28
2.2.2 The discourse functions of LD and RD	41
2.2.3 Summary and discussion	48
2.3 Topicalization	51
2.3.1 Definition and grammatical properties of TOP	51
2.3.2 The discourse functions of TOP	55
2.3.3 Summary and discussion	58
2.4 The hanging topic construction	59
2.4.1 Definition and grammatical properties of HT	59
2.4.2 The discourse functions of HT	64
2.4.3 Summary and discussion	66
2.5 Toward a grammar-in-interaction account of LD, RD, TOP and HT	68

Chapter 3: Left-dislocation as an interactional resource	73
3.1 Introduction: From monologic to interactional data	73
3.2 LD and turn-taking organization	75
3.2.1 Competing for the floor: Moving out of overlap	76
3.2.2 Competing for the floor: Self-selecting in mid-TCU	80
3.2.3 Self-selecting as a “disprivileged” next speaker	84
3.2.4 Summary: The online properties of LD and its use for turn-taking	89
3.3 LD and sequence organization	90
3.3.1 Opening a post-expansion	91
3.3.2 Opening a side-sequence	95
3.3.3 Introducing a subsidiary action within one speaker’s turn	99
3.3.4 Summary: LD as a resource for the sequential organization of actions	102
3.4 LD and preference organization: Managing (dis)agreement	103
3.5 LD in listing activities	107
3.6 LD as a routinized format for assessments	115
3.7 LD assessments as same-turn closing devices	121
3.8 Conclusion: LD as a resource for turn-taking and sequence organization	128
Chapter 4: Right-dislocation as an interactional resource	133
4.1 Introduction	133
4.2 RD as a resource for dealing with issues of reciprocity	135
4.2.1 Increments	135
4.2.2 RD composed incrementally: Pursuing reciprocity	136
4.2.3 Summary: RD as an emergent construction	144
4.3 RD as a routinized format for assessments	145
4.4 RD assessments as next-turn closing devices	151
4.5 Conclusion: RD between emergence and sedimentation	159
Chapter 5: Topicalization as an interactional resource	161
5.1 Introduction	161
5.2 [Ça je trouve ‘this I find’ + assessment segment]: A routinized format for assessments	164
5.3 Ça -TOP assessments in sequence-closing sequences	169
5.4 Ça je sais/connais ‘this I know’: A routinized format for (dis)claiming epistemic access	174
5.5 TOP in listing activities	178
5.6 Conclusion: On the tendency of speakers to use lexically (semi-)fixed TOP formats	182

Chapter 6: The hanging topic construction as an interactional resource	185
6.1 Introduction	185
6.2 HT in listing activities	186
6.3 Singling out a referent from a set of two contrasting items	195
6.4 Moi c'est X 'me it's X': A routinized format for proffering personal points of view	203
6.5 Aphoristic HT formulations as closing devices	209
6.6 Conclusion: Temporality and the relatedness of HT, TOP and LD	214
Chapter 7: Hybrid forms, online revisions and emergent grammar	221
7.1 Temporality and local adaptations	221
7.2 Projection: Allowing for things to come "in-between"	223
7.3 Distributed syntax: The case of try-marking	228
7.4 Online adaptations I: Case marking and gender agreement	231
7.5 Online adaptations II: Pivot patterns	234
7.6 Online adaptations III: Revisions of syntactic trajectories	236
7.7 Conclusion: A grammar for dealing with the local contingencies of social interaction	238
Chapter 8: Discussion and conclusion	241
8.1 Close looking at the world: Constructions as interactional resources	241
8.2 Summary of findings	242
8.3 Implications: Time and emergence in grammar-in-interaction	248
