THE DIFFERENT MODES OF EXISTENCE	95
by Étienne Souriau
First Chapter: Position of the Problem	97
Ontic monism and existential pluralism. Ontic pluralism and existential monism. – Their relations, their combinations. – Philosophical consequences: richness or poverty of being; the desired exclusions. – Metaphysical, moral, scientific, and practical aspects of the problem. Questions of method.
Second Chapter: The Intensive Modes of Existence	109
Tough minds and tender minds. – All or Nothing. – Becoming and the possible as degrees of existence. – Between being and non-being: levels, distances, and effects of perspective. – Pure existence and compared existence. – The ontic occupation of levels. – Pure existence and aseity. – Existence and reality.
Third Chapter: The Specific Modes of Existence	133
Section I: The phenomenon; the thing; ontic and identity; universals and singulars. – The psychical and the corporeal – the imaginary and the sollicitudinaire [sollicitudinaire] – the possible and the virtual – the problem of the noumenal.

Section II: The problem of transcendence. – To exist and to stand in judgment [ester]. – Existence in itself and existence for itself. – The transition.

Section III: Semantemes and morphemes. – The event; time; cause. – The synaptic order and the copula. – Is an exhaustive table of the modes of existence possible?

Fourth Chapter: Of Surexistence

187

The problems of unification; – simultaneous participation in several kinds of existence; – substantial union. – Surexistence in values; – qualified or axiological existence; – separation of existence and reality as values. – The second degree. – The Über-Sein of Eckhart and the One of Plotinus; – the Kantian antinomies; – the convergence of accomplishments; – the third degree. – The status of the surexistent; – its relation with existence. – Conclusions.
