Preface and Acknowledgements ix

Chapter 1. Introduction

1. Introduction 1
   - 1.1 The Goals of the Research 1
   - 1.2 The Problem 1
   - 1.3 The Theoretical Framework 2
2. A Brief Survey of Past Studies 3
   - 2.1. Hawkins 4
   - 2.2. Clark 6
   - 2.3. Sanford & Garrod 8
   - 2.4. Sidner 9
3. Main Issues 10
4. Characterisation of Bridging Implicature 15
   - 4.1. Clark's Definition 15
   - 4.2. An Alternative Definition 16
   - 4.3. Bridging Reference and Other Types of Referring Expressions 18
5. Overview of the Book 22

Chapter 2. Relevance Theory

1. Introduction 25
2. Basic notions 26
   - 2.1 Two principles of relevance 26
   - 2.2 Communication and relevance 27
   - 2.3 Optimal relevance 29
3. Relevance theory and alternative views of communication 34
   - 3.1 Relevance theory and the code-model 34
   - 3.2 Relevance theory and Grice 38
4. Utterance Interpretation 40
   - 4.1 Propositional form 40

4.2 Implicature 44
5. Summary 48

Chapter 3. Bridging reference assignment and accessibility of discourse entities

1. Introduction 51
2. Past studies of accessibility factors 52
   2.1 Order of mention 53
   2.2 Syntactic position 57
   2.3 Recency of mention 63
   2.4 Semantics of the main verb 65
   2.5 Parallel function and choice of conjunction 66
   2.6 Manner of mention 68
   2.7 Overall salience 70
   2.8 Summary 72
3. Topic/focus-based accounts and bridging reference 73
   3.1 Erku & Gundel 73
   3.2 Problems with Erku & Gundel 74
   3.3 Sidner 77
   3.4 Problems with Sidner's pragmatic criterion 78
4. The principle of relevance and bridging reference assignment 81
   4.1 Accessibility of discourse entities and processing effort 81
   4.2 Accessibility of contextual assumptions 85
   4.3 A relevance-theoretic solution to Sidner's problem 87
5. Summary 91

Chapter 4. Accessibility of bridging assumptions and other contextual assumptions

1. Introduction 93
2. Background 95
   2.1 Schemas, Scripts and Frames 95
   2.2 Research on Inference Generation 96
3. The Scenario-based Account 99
   3.1 Scenario and the Domain of Reference 99
   3.2 The Content of the Scenario 101
   3.3 Selecting an Appropriate Scenario 102
   3.4 The Structure of the Scenario — Explicit and Implicit Focus 103

3.5 Primary and Secondary Processing 104
4. Limitations 104
4.1 Computation of the Scenario 105
4.2 Representation of the Scenario 107
4.3 Examples: Sanford & Garrod's Problem 110
5. The Principle of Relevance and Selection/ Construction of Contextual Assumptions 115
5.1 Context and Search for Relevance 115
5.2 A Relevance-Theoretic Solution to Sanford & Garrod's Problem 119
5.2.1 Basic Assumptions 119
5.2.2 Explanation 122
6. Summary 128

Chapter 5. Acceptability Judgements for Bridging Reference
1. Introduction 131
2. Previous Accounts 133
2.1 Clark: the Given-New Contract 133
2.2 Sanford & Garrod: 'Scenario' — a Situational Model 137
2.3 Erku & Gundel and Sidner: Focus-based Approach 140
2.4 Hobbs and Sanders et al.: Coherence-based Approach 141
3. Truth-based Criteria: Clark and Sanford & Garrod 146
3.1 Plausibility 146
3.2 Shortness of the Bridge 150
3.3 Computability of the Bridge 153
4. A Relevance-Theoretic Account of Acceptability Judgements for Bridging Reference — Part I: Against Truth-based Criteria 159
5. Two Further Approaches: Focus-based and Coherence-based Accounts 167
5.1 Focus-based Account: Sidner and Erku & Gundel 167
5.1.1 Sidner 167
5.1.2 Erku & Gundel 170
5.2 Coherence-based Account: Hobbs and Sanders et al. 172
6. A Relevance-Theoretic Account of Acceptability Judgements for Bridging Reference — Part II: Against Focus-based and Coherence-based Accounts 179
7. Summary 195

Chapter 6. Conclusions
1. Introduction 197
2. Conclusions and limitations 197
