

CONTENTS

The numbers after the commas refer to the sections

	Page
Preface	5
Abbreviated Titles	11
Phonetic Symbols	12
I. The Simple Sentence	13— 90
A. General Structure	13— 58
Sentences not distinguishing subject and predicate, 1; the subject, 2; formal there, 3; formal it, 4; form of the subject, 5; parts of speech occurring as subjects, 6; the predicate, 7; secondary subject, 8; the object, 9; formal object, 10; instrumental object, 11; subjective and objective constructions, 12; prepositional objects, 13; two objects, 14; indirect objects and to-adjuncts, 15; adjuncts of benefit, 16; predicative adjuncts to the object, 17; secondary subjects to non-finite verbal forms, 18; verbal predicates with a meaning and without, nominal parts of the predicate (predicative adjuncts to the subject), 19; predicative adjuncts to verbs of some independent meaning, 20; predicative adjuncts with as and for, 21; predicative adjuncts (summary), 22; adverb adjuncts: form, 23; character, 24; sentence-qualifying adverbs, 25; not, 26; sentence-adverbs, 27; meanings of adverb-adjuncts, 28; meanings of sentences (declarative, interrogative, imperative), 29; imperative sentences, 30; exclamatory sentences, 31; parenthetical sentences, 32; post-attributive adjuncts containing a verbal ing, 33; free adjuncts: related, 34; unrelated, 35; absolute, 36; meanings of free adjuncts, 37; use of conjunctions and prepositions in free adjuncts, 38; character of free adjuncts, 39.
B. Concord	58— 67
Definition, 40; concord of person, 41; of number, 42; of collective nouns, 43—44; of nouns in -ics, 45; of nouns of measures, 46; between subject and nominal predicate, 47; between plural pronouns and nouns of inherent possession, 48; of compound indefinite pronouns, 49; of nouns with of-adjuncts, 50; of either and neither, 51; between verb and identifying or emphasizing it is, 52; between verb and formal there, 53.
C. Order of Words	67— 94
General remarks, 54; subject and predicate with independent meaning, 55; formal it as subject, 55.₂; formal there as subject, 55.₃; sentences without formal there of the order P—S, 56; pronominal questions, 57; verbal questions, 58; exclamatory sentences, 59; negative exclamatory sentences, 60; imperative sentences, 61; word-order in the predicate (general remarks), 62; place of objects;

63; place of predicative adjuncts, 64; groups with a verbal, 65.1; groups with to let, 65.2-4; front position of objects and nominal predicates, 66; of pronoun objects and predicative adjuncts in interr. and exclamatory sentences, 67; of preposition groups, 78; end-position of "prepositions", 69; place of objects to a verb with adverb group, 70; place of preposition groups, 71; place of indirect objects, 72-73; place of adverb-adjuncts, 74; end-position of adverbs defining a verb, 75; adverb-adjuncts preceding objects, 76; two or more adjuncts, 77; front-position of adverb-adjuncts, 78; mid-position of adverb adjuncts, 79; adverbs of manner, 80; adverbs of general time and of frequency, 81; adverbs of modality, 82; sentence-adverbs, 83; mid-position of adverbs, 84; only, 85; too, 86; perhaps, 87; adverbial preposition groups, 88.

II. Loose Sentence Groups and Appended Sentences 95-105

Unlinked groups, 89; linked groups, 90; introductory and, 91; or, 92; special sentence groups, 93; confirmative questions, 94; sympathetic questions, 95; alternative repeated questions, 96; confirmative statements, 97; denial, 98; answer, 99; repeated questions, 100.

III. The Compound Sentence 106-161

A. General Structure 106-151

General remarks, 101; subject clauses, 102; predicate clauses, 103; object clauses, 104; apposition clauses, 105; predicative adjunct clauses, 106; adverb clauses, 107; of time, 108; of place, 109; of cause or reason, 110; of purpose, 111; of result, effect or consequence, 112; of condition or supposition, 113; of comparison, 114; of manner, 115; of concession, 116; of restriction, 117; of exception, 118; of contrast, 119; of contingency, 120; of proportion, 121; of motivation, 122; of alternative hypothesis, 123; adverb clauses difficult of classification, 124; conjunctions capable of opening more than one kind of adverb clause, 125; continuative adverb clauses, 126; attributive clauses, 127; classifying attributive clauses, 128; individualizing attributive clauses, 129; comparison between attributive clauses introduced by who or which and that, 130-131; attributive clauses introduced by as and but, 132; attributive clauses introduced by a relative adverb, 133; non-introduced attributive clauses, 134; continuative clauses, 135; comparison between attributive and continuative clauses, 136; semi-adverbial clauses, 137; relative clauses opening with a preposition, 138; clauses referring to a preceding predicative adjunct, 139; subordination in apparently coordinate sentence-groups, 140; apparently compound sentences with it is, what is, there is, etc., 141; summary and retrospect, 142; noun groups as group-conjunctions, 143; shifting of words or word-groups from main to sub-clause, 144; correlative groups of adverbs and conjunctions, 145; limitations of traditional sentence-analysis, 146.

B. Concord of Tense 151-154

Direct and Indirect Style, 147.

	Page
C. Order of Words in Clause Groups and Compound Sentences	154—159
General remarks, 148; dependent questions, 149; relative clauses with preposition groups, 150; adverbs in relative clauses, 151; concessive clauses, 152; appended sentences, 153; parenthetical clauses, 154.
D. Order of Clauses, 155	159—161
IV. Syntactic Word-Groups	162—206
A. Loose Word-Groups	162—169
Structure, 156; relations between members of loose groups, 157; word-order, 158.
B. Close Word-Groups	169—206
Character, 159; noun groups and appositional groups, 160; noun groups with of, 161; individualizing numeratives, 162; unifying numeratives, 163; adjective groups, 164; pronoun groups, 165; verb groups, 166; preposition groups: kind of, sort of, 167; word-order in close groups, 168; word-order in noun groups, 169; post-position of attributive members, 170; position of attributive nouns, 171; position of attributive adverbs, 172; word-order in pronoun groups, 173; in adjective and adverb groups, 174; in preposition groups, 175; in groups with a leading non-finite verb, 176; loose groups as parts of close groups, 177; loose groups and close groups compared, 178.
V. Inflections in English	207—211
Inflection and derivation, 179; inflectional suffixes, 180; verbs with variable stem, 181.
VI. The Preterite	212—224
Functions of the preterite, 182; narrative past tense, 183; iterative past tense, 184; preterite of concord, 185; modal preterite, 186; special modal character of could, might, should, would, 187; preterite of modesty, 188; had better, rather, sooner, 189; comparison between preterite of modesty and present tense, 190; preterite of hypothesis, 191; irrealis, 192; was and were, 193; occasional impossibility to distinguish between the three functions of the preterite, 194; irrealis in Dutch and English compared, 195.
VII. The Participle	225—246
Form, 196. The participle in groups with have: perfect, 197; resultative perfect, 198; present-perfect, 199; had as irrealis in groups with a participle, 200; perfect and pluperfect in sub-clauses, 201; perfect and pluperfect of experience, 202; continuative perfect and pluperfect, 203.

The participle in groups with be: predicative participle of state, 204; predicative participle of occurrence, 205; participles of state and of occurrence compared, 206; participles of verbs with two objects, 207; participles of verbs with a prepositional object, 208; predicative participles with verb stem, 209; indefinite case with participle, 210.

The participle in noun-groups, 213; place of the attributive participle, 214;

Participles in free adjuncts, 215.

Character and meaning of the participle, 216.

VIII. The Verbal Ing 247—282

Order of discussion, 217; functions, 218.

Verbal ing in word-groups: prepositional ing, 219; plain ing in verb-groups, 220; verbal ing as dominant member of a verb group, 221; verbal ing in groups with to be as leading member, 222; the progressive, 223; present progressive, 224; present progressive referring to future time, 225; reported prospective progressive, 227; descriptive progressive, 228; emotional progressive, 229; progressive in sentences containing adverbs of unlimited duration, 230; verbs not occurring in the progressive, 231; to have in progressive, 232; to be in progressive, 233; verbs occurring in the progressive in part of their meanings only, 234; verbs occurring in the emotional progressive only, 235; plain ing with adjectives, 236; plain ing in sentences with formal it and there, 237; plain ing in noun-groups, 238; predicative participle with verbal ing, 239.

Verbal ing in free adjuncts, 240.

The plain ing as subject, 241.

Constructions in groups with a verbal ing, 242; subject of prepositional ing, 243; subject of plain ing (indefinite case and verbal ing), 244; subject of the ing in free adjuncts, 245; subject with ing as a grammatical subject, 246; the ing with nominal adjuncts, 247; having with participle, 248; being and having been with participle, 249; ings expressing an occurrence, 250.

Character and meaning of the verbal ing: "Gerund" and "Present Participle", 251; relation to the finite verb, 252; the ing and clauses with how compared, 253; relation to the substantive, 254; relation to the adjective, 255; place of the ing, 256; relation to other words, 257.

Texts 283—307