

Contents

	Preface and acknowledgments	page ix
1	The need for personality study	1
2	Personality and theory	6
	Personality	6
	Theory	9
3	The Freudian account of personality	13
	Sigmund Freud (1856-1939)	13
	The nature of personality	15
	The workings of personality	18
	How personality develops	25
	An evaluation of Freud's theory	28
	Psychoanalysis since Freud	33
4	The Adlerian account of personality	37
	Alfred Adler (1870-1937)	37
	The nature of personality	39
	The workings of personality	41
	How personality develops	46
	An evaluation of Adler's theory	51
	Adler and education	56
5	Contrasting approaches: G. W. Allport and H. J. Eysenck	61
	Biographical note	61
	Differing standpoints	62
	Allport's theory	65
	Eysenck's theory	69
		vii

CONTENTS

6	Personality and learning	74
	Introductory	74
	Extraversion–introversion and learning	75
	Stability and learning	80
7	Personality and teaching	84
	Introductory	84
	Extraversion–introversion and teaching	86
	Stability and teaching	91
	The good teacher	93
8	Teacher–pupil interaction	96
	Towards effective teacher–pupil interaction	102
	Conclusion	106
	Suggestions for further reading	108
	Bibliography	110