Table of contents

Preface VII

CHAPTER 1
The whole and its parts 1
1.1 Towards a holistic understanding of language 1
1.2 The aim of this work 6

CHAPTER 2
State-of-the-art theories 9
2.1 Structuralism 9
2.2 Psychological models 12
2.3 Logical semantics 14
2.4 Transformational theory and the Generative Lexicon 15
2.5 Cognitive theories of meaning 18
2.6 Use theories and action-theoretical models 22
2.7 Corpus linguistics 24
2.8 Some consequences for this work 26

CHAPTER 3
Theoretical foundation 29
3.1 The framework for the semantic analyses: Language-in-use 29
3.2 Linguistic v. non-linguistic knowledge 34
3.3 Meaning as predication: Meaning-in-use 39
3.4 The lexical unit: Testing the limits 45
3.5 Meaning or meanings? 49

CHAPTER 4
Methodological preliminaries 55
4.1 The selection of examples 55
4.2 The test set-up 57
4.3 Corpus data: Handle with care 58
4.4 The semantic representation 59

CHAPTER 5
The semantic analysis (Part I) – The semantic interplay of subject-NP and VP 65
5.1 'to support' 65
5.2 'to pay' 76
5.3 'to carry' 84
5.4 'to say' 93

CHAPTER 6
The semantic analysis (Part II) – New lexical entries. A pilot study 105
6.1 New lexical entries around 'to support' 105
6.2 New lexical entries around 'to carry' 117
6.3 New lexical entries around 'to pay' 132
6.4 New lexical entries around 'to say' 153

CHAPTER 7
Conclusion 167
7.1 The lexical unit redefined 167
7.2 Practical implications 168
7.3 From lexical units to lexical concepts – An outlook 170

References 173
Index 183