

CONTENTS

List of Illustrations	x
Acknowledgements	xi
Introduction: Utopia, History and Teleology: The Bicentenary European Search for a Political Economy for Welfare and Warfare, and the Struggle with Nationalism and Democracy	1
The outline of the book: the problem and the perspective	1
Utopia as never again	9
1 The Vienna Peace Utopia of 1815 and the World of Trade	23
The preludes: the unification of Europe through economic warfare	23
Gentz vs d'Hauterive and Fichte on the commercial world order	27
The British world order: the economic political framework of the peace negotiations	34
The Congress and the Treaty	42
The conference system and the Holy Alliance: the directorate of Europe ordering the world	59
Friedrich Gentz: Secretary of Europe and designer of the Vienna Peace Utopia	75
The Vienna Utopia	89
Two Cold War views on Vienna and the revolution: Kissinger and Koselleck	91
2 Welfare: The Dissolution of the Vienna Peace Utopia from Within	97
Welfare for social peace	97
The 'industrial system' and the 'social question': a new economic world view	99
The alternative dream of harmony	107
The historical school and a romantic political economy: the nation against the universal	113
The search for a middle ground for the social question	122
1848	132
The communist spectre and Marx's utopia of social peace	139
Between reform and revolution: socialism after Marx	148
The 1870s and 1880s: the Katheder socialists and Bismarck's conservative utopia of social peace	153
The crisis of liberalism from within: national socialism, ethnic nationalism and the search for welfare and community	163

Contents

3	Warfare: The Dissolution of the Vienna Peace Utopia from Without	167
	Warfare: the challenges of the peace utopia from without	167
	The Crimean War and the Italian and German unifications: Bismarck replaces Metternich	171
	Free trade and protectionism	182
	The international lawyers and the peace movement: a different utopia	190
	The European directorate of the world meets in Berlin	202
	Faces and phases of imperialism	210
	Social imperialism	226
	The crisis of liberalism from without: nationalism and warfare for community	229
4	Versailles: The Utopia of Peace through Democracy	239
	Setting the stage in Washington and St Petersburg	239
	Work on utopia	247
	Imposition of the peace on the loser	261
	Keynes' critique of the utopia	263
	The Locarno spirit and the imagery of Pan-Europe	270
	The second utopia: communism as futurism	282
	Edward H. Carr on utopia	288
	Fascism as Futurism and Weimar dreams and nightmares	294
	The myth of Versailles	300
5	The Great Depression and the Collapse of the World Order	305
	The illusion of national self-determination and the myth of free trade	305
	The collapse of the global political economy	309
	The crisis of liberalism: the social question and the gold standard	312
	The myth of the mass	323
	The disillusion of the imagery of world government	330
	Hitler and America – fascism and democracy: entangled and ambiguous relationships	333
	Perspectives	340
6	After the Second World War: From the Utopia of Peace for the Cold War to the Euro Crisis and the Search for a New Narrative	343
	The setting of the post-war scene	343
	The utopia for peace in the Cold War	352
	De Gaulle against Monnet	363
	The great transformation and the utopia of Keynes	368
	The utopia of European identity as refuge	377
	The end of the Cold War: Hayek's utopia	382
	Europe as an economic, social and political space	402

Europe as a legal space	406
The future: the past and the present – and the new narrative	414
7 Epilogue: The Bicentenary European Struggle with Nationalism and Democracy, and Search for a Global Political Economy	421
The bicentenary struggle with nationalism	421
The bicentenary struggle with democracy	426
Welfare and warfare: creating community and ordering the world	437
The search for a political economy	443
Accelerating time and shrinking space: the gap between experiences and expectations	450
Notes	455
References	491
Index	519